Carter freezes Iran's assets

Iran's plan to withdraw $5B stymied

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — President Carter, declaring a national emergency to deal with the Iranian threat, today ordered a freeze of all Iranian assets in the United States, estimated at $5 billion.

The move came just a few hours after Iran disclosed it would withdraw its funds from U.S. banks.

(Related pictures, page 45)

It was the third major action Carter has taken against Iran in the rapidly escalating crisis. Carter has also ordered deportation proceedings against Iranian student-visa violators and a ban on Iranian oil imports.

The president's new order blocks all official Iranian assets in the U.S., including deposits in U.S. banks and in their foreign branches and subsidiaries.

The duel over Iranian assets upset financial markets, but the damage was limited.

Nervousness over escalation of the conflict between the U.S. and Iran caused the stock market to decline in early trading. The dollar fell in Europe when Iran announced its intention to withdraw deposits from U.S. banks, then recovered when President Carter froze Iranian government assets.

The purpose of the order, according to White House Press Secretary Jody Powell, is to ensure claims against Iran by the U.S. government and citizens are protected and provided for in an orderly way.

The executive order freezing all Iranian government property in the United States said:

"I, Jimmy Carter, President of the United States, find that the situation in Iran constitutes an unsual and extraordinary threat to the national security, foreign policy, and economy of the United States, and hereby declare a national emergency to deal with that threat.

"I hereby order blocked all property and interests in property of the government of Iran, its instrumentalities and controlled entities, and the Central Bank of Iran, which are, or become subject to, the jurisdiction of the United States or which are in, or come within, the possession or control of persons subject to the jurisdiction of the United States."

Although official estimates are that Iranian government entities have $5 billion on deposit, the revolutionary government of Iran says its reserves total approximately $12 billion and financial experts in Tehran reported about $8 billion to $9 billion was in U.S. banks.

The order does not affect the bank accounts of private persons but does apply to the government of Iran, the Central Bank of Iran and other controlled entities.

In other related developments:

—The former shah of Iran is suffering from a baseball-sized tumor on his neck and his doctors plan to operate as soon as the ousted monarch feels well enough, officials of the Carter administration say. "His condition is getting worse and worse," said one official.

—In Washington, a Pentagon spokesmen confirmed that more than 270 Iranian Air Force officers and enlisted men continue to receive flight training at U.S. military bases around the country. Col. Mike Burch, also said the Carter administration is considering whether to discontinue the training.

—In Vancouver today, federal Immigration Minister Ron Atkey said a preliminary investigation into Iranian students studying in Canada has shown that most have legal visas. Atkey said he ordered his staff to check into the legal status of Iranians attending Canadian universities.

Lenko quits over 'tricks'

By JAKE BANKY

The executive assistant to Human Resources Minister Grace McCarthy has resigned in the aftermath of the dirty tricks scandal.

George Lenko, who organized the taping of a Socred seminar where dirty tricks were advocated and later admitted listening to the tapes, submitted his resignation today.

(See earlier 'tricks' story on page 49.)

Lenko said his job was only to edit the tapes and said he takes full responsibility for the section on dirty tricks not being erased.

"For this lack of diligence, I apologize," Lenko said in a prepared statement.

He insisted there is no mystery and said allegations that other people are involved are untrue.

Lenko said he is quitting because he has been put in an "intolerable position.".

McCarthy said Lenko has resigned because he feels the press does not believe him when he says his hands are clean: "He will not live in a state of harassment."

NDP leader Dave Barrett said Lenko's resignation raises more questions than it answers.

Earlier the Social Credit party's chief researcher Jack Kelly quit because of his involvement and another research worker, Ellen MacKay, refused to accept a 30-day suspension without pay for her part in the affair.

Meanwhile, reporters have been unable to interview Premier Bill Bennett's senior aide, Tony Tozer, concerning a possible secret party bank account in Victoria.

Tozer has admitted he authorized payment for the expenses of Kelly and MacKay at the Vancouver seminar where the tapes were made and that the money came out of the special account in Victoria.

$4-a-barrel hike to tighten pinch on B.C.: Hewitt

By JAKE BANKY

Energy Minister Jim Hewitt says a proposed $4-a-barrel increase in the price of domestic oil next year will tighten the squeeze on B.C.'s already pinched economy.

Prime Minister Joe Clark is meeting today in Saskatoon with Saskatchewan Premier Alan Blakeney and Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed to discuss oil prices.

B.C. is not represented at the meeting.

Premier Bill Bennett is in California and Hewitt expects he will be in contact with Clark on his return next week.

Hewitt said on his return Tuesday from the federal-provincial energy conference in Ottawa, that a $4 increase — expected in 1980 — will mean an extra jump in the unemployment rate of 0.4 per cent, a decline in real output of 1.2 per cent and an increase in the inflation rate of approximately two per cent for B.C.

Hewitt said he believes the increase will come in two stages — a $1 increase in January and a $3 increase next July.

The minister also brought back a warning that the hike will by no means be a one-shot affair.

"We can expect domestic oil prices to rise by four dollars a barrel every year for the next three or four years," Hewitt predicted.

And even then he expects the Canadian price will still not match the world price at the time.

B.C. was one of the provinces which backed Clark's proposal to increase domestic oil prices. Only Ontario stood firmly opposed.

However Hewitt is not prepared to consider a similar increase in the domestic price of B.C.'s natural gas.

Oil and gas, he said, are two separate issues.

"We don't sell natural gas to eastern Canada — we use it domestically and we export it. We feel we can encourage the use of natural gas by controlling the domestic price in B.C.," said Hewitt.

By increasing our use of gas, he said, British Columbians can conserve oil.

The minister suggested Clark might consider using funds from his proposed energy development bank to help pay for a natural gas pipeline to Vancouver Island.

He also reiterated his intention to seek National Energy Board approval for an increase in the export price of natural gas to the world level — the $3.62½ per thousand cubic feet Mexico will be getting for its gas as of Jan. 1.

The current Canadian export price for gas is $3.45 per MCF.

Lougheed told the Alberta legislature Tuesday he will meet the prime minister but warned that Clark will have to clarify certain points before any agreement can be considered.

Of concern to Lougheed are conflicting statements out of Ottawa concerning the federal government's plan for a federal tax on oil company profits.

He said Alberta is prepared to accept the federal tax on increased oil company profits provided it is based only on profits and not on gross revenue from oil production.

Alberta, he said, should have first crack at the gross revenues through provincial royalties on production.

Lougheed said he will restate Alberta's position that it will not accept a federal tax on oil companies' revenue, a tax he said would be "even more reprehensible" than the former Liberal government's 1973 oil export tax.

Westcoast bids for Island line

A $260-million pipeline to bring natural gas to Vancouver island, Powell River and the Squamish area has been proposed by Westcoast Transmission Co. Ltd.

Westcoast said in a submission today to the B.C. government the gas would be priced below oil, electricity and propane.

The system, if approved, would serve approximately 70 per cent of Vancouver Island's population — from Victoria to Campbell River and including Port Alberni on the Island's west coast.

A rival proposal for a gas pipeline to the Island is expected from B.C. Hydro.

Premier Bill Bennett on several occasions has said bringing gas to the Island is a definite part of his energy policy.

From there the line would go under the Strait of Georgia and Malaspina Strait to Comox.

A spur line from a point near Qualicum would supply Port Alberni and a 45-kilometre line would extend from Courtney north to the Campbell River area.

Westcoast estimates the cost of gas will only be 51 per cent of the cost of either electricity or propane.

It is estimated natural gas would be only 53 per cent of the cost of home heating oil available on Vancouver Island in 1983, when construction of a line would be completed.

Metric move delayed?

OTTAWA (CP) — The government will likely postpone the conversion to the metric system planned for Jan. 1, for grocery stores, farmers and food packing and processing plants, Small Business Minister Ron Huntington said Tuesday.

Huntington told Charles Mayer (PC — Portage-Marquette) in the Commons the public does not fully understand the new system of weights and measures and pressing ahead with the Jan. 1 start could stir up widespread hostility to it.

He told reporters later he didn't know when the conversion would begin, but the postponement doesn't mean the government is backing away from its commitment to metric.

Rich return for one man

MISSISSAUGA, Ont. (CP) — When Bernadino Pede was forced to evacuate his Mississauga home Sunday, he took very little with him. One thing he did take, however, was a ticket for the Wintario draw.

It was a good thing he did. He won $100,000 with it.

"They still don't believe it," Pede's daughter, Rosa, said of the lottery win.

She said the first thing her father took as he prepared to leave his home was the ticket and the excitement over winning with it still hasn't subsided.

Bar fishermen from pass — Ferries

By PAUL MINVIELLE

The B.C. Ferry Corporation has asked Transport Canada to close most of Active Pass to sports fishermen.

A three-page letter from ferries operations manager Peter de Cunha asking for the closure was submitted Tuesday to a Coast Guard hearing on Active Pass.

The letter said it is the unanimous opinion of ferry captains that unless specific action is taken to control small craft in the area, then accidents involving fatalities are to be expected.

However, sports fisherman Dick Collins, of Vancouver, told the hearing Active Pass is one of the few spectacular areas for experienced fishermen.

He reminded everyone that two inquiries into the grounding of the Alberni have exonerated sports fishermen and maintained that no accident had been caused by sports fishermen in the pass over the past 20 years.

"Why then are we, the sports fishermen, bearing the brunt of this enquiry?"

Transportation Minister Alex Fraser today offered a compromise solution.

He proposed that sports fishermen be barred from the pass and its approaches during the peak ferry traffic months of June, July and August and be allowed to return after Labor Day.

Fraser opposed the possibility of the ferries abandoning Active Pass and sailing around the outside of the islands.

"I certainly oppose that," he said. "We're in this business to give a service and adding half an hour or 40 minutes to the run to go around would definitely deteriorate that service."

Herb Buchanan, the regional director of the Canadian Coast Guard who chaired Tuesday night's meeting, told the session: "We're not here to lecture you, we're here to listen to you."

There is another public meeting on Mayne Island tonight and a final meeting in Vancouver on Thursday.

The meetings were called as a result of the grounding of the Queen of Alberni on Collinson Reef in Active Pass Aug. 9.

Les Obee, of Victoria, and Hud Graham, owner of Cedar Grove Marina at Swartz Bay, praised the fishing in the pass and said there is no reason for small craft to impede larger ships.

Collins said commercial trollers, underpowered sailboats, pleasure craft, gillnetters, underpowered tugs and freighters all contribute to the congestion.

Buchanan read some of the proposed solutions that have been submitted.

—Cameras on the ferries' bows to photograph craft illegally impeding any ferries progress.

—Rescheduling ferry traffic.

—Large signs on nearby islands warning vessel operators of fines for disobeying the rules.

—A slow speed zone to protect people on the beaches, especially children, and prevent erosion.

By RICHARD BURT
New York Times

WASHINGTON — The U.S. army is seeking President Carter's approval to start a program to produce a new generation of chemical weapons, defence department officials said Tuesday.

The officials said the army's $19.3 million request for new nerve gas weapons was contained in the Pentagon's tentative budget for the fiscal year 1981. The funds, they added, would be used to begin construction of a $170 million facility that would produce 155-millimeter artillery shells filled with chemicals.

The shells, known as "binary munitions," would contain two nonlethal agents that would combine to produce nerve gas only after they were fired at a target. They would be designed to replace much of the Army's existing stockpile of chemical arms, which officials asserted has grown obsolete over the last decade.

The army has pressed for binary munitions for almost a decade, but without much success.

While the army is reported to have succeeded in gaining tentative approval for binary arms in the 1981 budget, officials said the proposal had touched off an intense debate at high levels of the administration. They said that at a White House meeting on military spending last week presidential security aides and state department officials contended that a commitment to proceed with new chemical weapons would alarm allied governments in Western Europe.

In particular, the officials are said to have voiced concern that Carter's support for nerve gas weapons would jeopardize the approval of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) for an administration plan to deploy new medium-range nuclear missiles in West Europe.

The United States maintained a large stockpile of nerve gas after the Second World War, but in 1969 the Nixon administration decided to forgo biological weapons and to reduce stocks of chemical arms.

At the same time, the United States and other nations, including the Soviet Union, accelerated efforts to reach agreement on a total ban on the production and deployment of chemical weapons in arms control at the Geneva disamament talks.

Defence officials said that intelligence reports since 1973 disclosed that the Soviet Union has continued to increase and modernize its chemical inventory of nerve gas.

Dutch still not N-sold

THE HAGUE (Reuter) — Defence ministers of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization ended a meeting today with the Netherlands still opposed to NATO plans to install new nuclear missiles in Europe.

NATO Secretary-General Joseph Luns told a news conference that the 11-state meeting made progress toward a decision on modernization of NATO's tactical nuclear missiles.

Dutch Defence Minister Willem Scholten told his colleagues Tuesday that the Netherlands wants next month's meeting in Brussels to decide only to produce some of the weapons and make any decision on actual deployment dependent on fresh East-West arms-control negotiations.

Luns, chairman of the two-day meeting of NATO's nuclear planning group, said the Western alliance needs to modernize its missiles because of "the gap which already exists and is steadily widening" between the tactical nuclear missiles of the Soviet Union and those of NATO.

CN Rail profits jump 53 per cent

MONTREAL (CP) — Canadian National Railways reports profits of $171.4 million for the first nine months of 1979, a 53-per-cent increase over profits of $112.1 million for the same period last year.

Federally-owned CN also announced Tuesday that its third-quarter profits hit $78.8 million, 55 per cent higher than last year's $50.8 million.

Higher traffic volume and higher rates helped CN's railway freight division make profits of $231 million the first nine months this year.

Passenger losses declined to $10.1 million, an improvement over a $40.1-million loss last year before Via Rail Canada had completed its takeover of intercity passenger trains.

Traffic snarled by fire

Traffic through downtown Victoria was snarled for an hour Tuesday afternoon after a fire was reported in the Broughton Building at Broughton and Douglas.

Firemen and equipment from all three city stations responded to the 1:30 p.m. alarm.

But it turned out to be a minor blaze in an accumulation of waste in a six-inch gap between the Broughton and Bentall buildings.

Traffic had to be re-routed off Douglas and the problems were further complicated when patrons attending the matinee performance of the Peking Opera poured out of the Royal Theatre at 2 p.m.

East-West pledge to act on pollution

GENEVA (AP) — Eastern and Western European countries, in an unprecedented joint effort to protect the environment, Tuesday pledged to try to combat air pollution moving across national borders.

In the first ministerial meeting on the environment ever held under the auspices of the Economic Commission for Europe, the 34 ECE members minus Albania pledged in a 10-article agreement they would endeavor to "limit and, as far as possible, gradually reduce and prevent" all forms of air pollution, particularly toxic trans-border emissions.

The agreement falls short of what Canada is seeking in its current discussions with the U.S. on the bilateral dimensions of the problem, Canadian Environment Minister John Fraser said.

"It does not, for example, require a specific reduction in air pollution, although it does expect of signators a serious effort to undertake research and to exchange scientific information leading to an eventual aeliora-tion of the problem," said Fraser, who was in Geneva.

Western delegates saw the agreement, adopted without a vote, as setting a precedent for East-West negotiations on environmental issues. It commits all signatories to consult with one another in developing measures to monitor airborne trans-border pollution.

Until now, measures to control the movement of these pollutants have been agreed in several bilateral conventions, but this is the first broad international accord.

Implementation of the agreement, expected to be worked out at a meeting in Geneva later, will be reviewed by a so-called executive body, meeting yearly.

The agreement was pushed by Scandinavian countries, often hit by freak winds carrying emissions from industrial centres in both Eastern and Western countries.

In an opening statement to the four-day meeting, Norwegian Environment Minister Rolf Hansen said rains have carried down airborne sulphur, killing fishstocks in a majority of the lakes and rivers in his country.

Failure to implement the agreement, Hansen said, would result in "serious continued deterioration of the environment."

The Soviet Union said it would sign the agreement.

Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev said in a message to the meeting his country "intends to continue to promote in every possible way efforts to expand . . . co-operation in the environmental field between the countries of Europe, the United States and Canada."

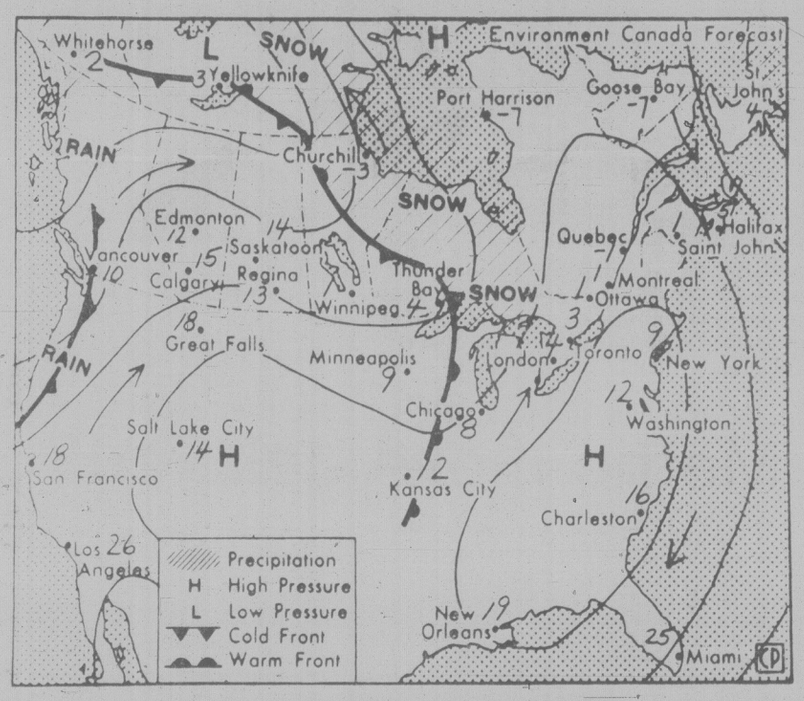

Map valid until noon Thursday

The ridge of high pressure over eastern B.C. continues to weaken and allow a Pacific front west of the Charlottes to edge eastward. Occasional rain accompanying the front on the north coast will gradually spread southward reaching most south coast localities late Thursday. Warmer moist air in the southerly flow ahead of the front will result in gradually warming temperatures over most of B.C. Thursday.

Fort Nelson mill resumes loading of railway cars

FORT NELSON (CP) — Tackama Forest Products Ltd., which last week was forced to lay off about 210 workers because of a shortage of storage space, began loading veneer onto rail cars Tuesday morning.

Tackama and two other lumber mills have been stockpiling lumber since fire destroyed a B.C. Railway trestle near Fort. St. John 3½ weeks ago, cutting the only rail link to outside markets.

A bailey bridge near the confluence of the Peace and Pine Rivers was completed during the weekend, making it possible to truck freight across the Pine River.

Shipments of lumber and sulphur now will be taken from Fort Nelson to Fort St. John, where they will be loaded onto trucks and taken around the point of the fire to Teko, 20 kilometres to the south. There they will be re-loaded onto railcars and shipped south.

The lack of storage space for stockpiled lumber forced the Tackama operation to close down at the end of the afternoon shift Friday. The other two mills — Fort Nelson Industries Ltd. and Omenica Enterprise — did not follow suit.

Al Hume, Tackama general manager, said he hoped the workers could be back on the job in about three or four days.

"We had 13 cars available for loading today and there are 26 more on the tracks," he said. "I'd say that in the early part of next week, we'll be able to assess our inventory level."

The two other operations did not have to shut down because they are considerably smaller, produce random dimension lumber and do not have Tackama's storage problem.

Hugh Armstrong, B.C. Rail spokesman, said Tackama and Fort Nelson Industries have requested to ship 16 cars of lumber and 14 cars of veneer a day. Petrosul, a manufacturer of sulphur pellets, wants four cars a day to be shipped.

"We are doing everything possible to meet these requests," he said.

Meanwhile, representatives of the three mills will meet in Prince George today to discuss details of an agreement worked out Friday to solve the high cost of trucking lumber.

The provincial government has already agreed to reduce stumpage fees in an effort to reduce the burden of transporation costs on the mills. Other forms of aid are to be discussed at the meeting.

The trestle caught fire after 11 unattended tank cars containing fuel ran down an incline onto the trestle, derailed and exploded into flames.

Yves Tremblay, 20, a former railway employee, and Stanley Newdorf, 22, were later charged with mischief. Their cases are still before the courts.

Armstrong said work on the earthfill to restore the rail link is progessing.

About 320,000 cubic yards of fill have been taken to the site. A further 800,000 cubic yards will be needed to finish the project, which is expected to be completed by the end of the year.

Workers 'erred' in abuse case

Human Resources Minister Grace McCarthy admitted Tuesday an error in judgment was made two years ago when social workers decided not to remove children from a Richmond foster home after reports of child abuse.

Mrs. McCarthy said she has asked ministry officials for recommendations on how procedures can be improved to prevent a repeat occurrence.

The case involved a foster father who has since been convicted on three counts of indecent assault against three female children who were staying at the home.

Mrs. McCarthy said a case of alleged abuse came to the attention of authorities in 1977 but the social worker involved, after consultation with other professionals, decided to let the children stay in the home despite disciplinary measures said to have been "excessive and inappropriate."

"Methods of discipline, treatment of the children and their approach to fostering were thoroughly discussed with the foster parents by the professionals involved," Mrs. McCarthy said.

Officials continued monitoring the home and the children were well cared for.

"These children had been in this home for seven years and the home was considered a permanent replacement. For these reasons the children were not removed," Mrs. McCarthy said.

"In retrospect, however, I can say that this decision was an error in judgment."

She said action was taken as soon as it became apparent there was more to the situation than questionable disciplinary methods.

ACTRA dispute hobbles movie

VANCOUVER (CP) — A dispute between the Association for Canadian Television and Radio Artists and March Films Ltd., a Canadian film company set up for production of the feature film CeBe, could result in the loss of capital cost allowance deductions for Canadian investors who financed the $2.2-million film.

Association members set up an information picket line Tuesday at a shooting location here to protest the non-involvement of Canadian actors, directors and technicians in the production.

ACTRA president Jack Gray said that in order for the film to qualify under the provision of the capital cost allowance, the production must meet certain criteria — including earning profits for the investors and maintaining a maximum of six points through hiring Canadian professionals.

He said the company was unwilling or unable to sign the customary agreement or letter of adherence to ensure the involvement of ACTRA members.

Gray said although there are several Canadians involved, they are not there in a professional capacity. The American stars include Linda Manz and Raymond Burr.

Times Handicap '79, Part II

The Times' Election Handicap for today focuses on the Greater Victoria School Board Purse. This year the race is divided into two divisions by the availability of a one-year term on the board (a vacancy created when Susan Brice switched to run in Oak Bay).

The Handicap, we again remind readers, is not a prediction of how the candidates will finish but a rough ordering of the candidates in order of merit as we perceive them.

This year six candidates are running for four two-year terms on the board. Two of the six are incumbents running for re-election; they are joined by one contender transferring in from another racetrack (Burnaby) and three candidates making their first bid for elected office.

In the race for the two-year terms:

Carol Pickup — Pickup took over the chairmanship of a badly-divided school board this year and has done a more than adequate job. Although at the beginning the year, board business almost came to a grinding halt, Pickup learned her new role quickly and pulled the board together into a reasonably effective group. She comes from the "educational quality" side of the board as opposed to the "budget balancers", but has not let spending get particularly out of hand.

Michael Hutchison — A lawyer making his first bid for elected office, Hutchison appears to have the potential to become a first-rate school trustee. He is bright and articulate, and has had success in various community affairs. He promises to try to bridge the gap between the "educational quality group" and the "budget balancers," something that is still sorely needed on the board.

John Young — Every school board needs a social conscience, and Young is Greater Victoria's. In his two years on the school board, he has been persistent, unrelenting, and abrasive, often frustrating other trustees and perhaps losing some of his effectiveness through his style. Yet at the same time he has ensured that the needs of the children in the classroom, particularly the youngest children and those with special difficulties, can never be forgotten by the board for a minute.

Joan Dayton — Dayton is another newcomer to school board politics, taking on the torch thrown by retiring trustee Mary Breer. That torch is a special concern for the problems of children with learning disabilities. Dayton has spent a fair amount of time in recent months attending board meeting and making herself familiar with the issues facing the board. That should give her an edge in breaking in to the board, if she is elected. The concern is that she might be a one-issue candidate, concentrating on the learning disabled to the exclusion of other important issues.

Joan Johnston — Johnston was formerly a trustee in Burnaby for four years, which means she should know something of how the school system works. She has had some Victoria involvement through the James Bay Community School. All the same, there is some question as to whether she has developed the necessary political knowledge of Victoria to be an effective trustee here.

Terence Hackett — Hackett is the last of the newcomers and essentially remains quite unknown. His platform is couched mostly in motherhood platitudes, and it's difficult to figure out just what he stands for.

In the match race for the one-year term on the board:

Lavinia Greenwood — Greenwood served as trustee a few years ago, and, rather like Young, seemed to spend a lot of time annoying and offending her fellow-trustees. Her style was such that she often lost points she might otherwise have won. All the same, she brought to the board a genuine concern for the rights of students and a good academic background of educational skills. These would be valuable on the board again.

Al Frame — Frame is another who remains quite unknown, although he was one of the first newcomers to announce his candidacy. He manages the Classic Car Museum and is not known to have any particular previous connection with the school system. Again, his platform is framed mostly in generalities, although it appears he would probably come down on the side of the "budget balancers" most of the time.

Tomorrow: the races for Saanich mayor and aldermen.

Get'em back on track

Most Canadians, given the opportunity, would undoubtedly join the members of the Ontario legislature who pounded their desks in a tribute to the 230,000 Mississauga residents for the way they handled the weekend crisis in their community.

The orderly evacuation of nearly a quarter of a million people from the densely populated 130 square kilometer area just west of Toronto was nothing short of phenomenal. Families moved out of their homes and apartments to bed down at evacuation centers or with friends and relatives in a manner that placed no added strain on the government officials who were dealing with the fire and potential gas problem.

John Colombo, the author of a book on Canadian quotations, made a realistic assessment of the evacuation: "The temper of Canadians had been tested, and I think, not found wanting."

Colombo also noted that no civil liberties issues had been raised when people were asked to leave their homes. It's to the evacuees' credit that the author was able to make that observation.

However, as Mississauga residents now return to their homes, they are by no means going to let the issue die. And rightly so. There is speculation about a flood of court cases to recoup any losses or damages suffered by them. Many are talking about a class action.

And while authorities continue their investigation, policitians in Ontario, and indeed elsewhere in the country, must do more than pay lip service to the obvious problems involving the movement of dangerous chemicals and the appropriate regulating legislation.

Cars from the Canadian Pacific Rail train that derailed in Mississauga were carrying propane, chlorine, butane, caustic soda and other substances. Of the 25 cars that left the rails, seven or eight exploded in the resulting fire. The accident has been attributed to an overheated wheel bearing on one of the cars — a mishap known as a hotbox.

The executive vice-president CP Rail, W.W. Stinson, said he thought the accident could have been averted if hotbox detectors had been installed along this particular rail line. That being the case, it would appear in hindsight that the regulations governing rail movement have been lax in securing the safety of people who live near rail lines over which dangerous chemicals are shunted.

Train derailments in British Columbia have become a fact of life. It's just that some are more newsworthy than others. The notables include the recent severing of the BCR line near Fort Nelson when a trestle burned, and the 1977 suplphur fire near Hope that sent 200 people fleeing from their homes.

There is no reason to believe B.C. has the market on derailments. Like other areas of the country, it has been fortunate in that none of the major rail accidents have occured in heavily populated areas. Nevertheless, chemicals with high explosive capabilities are shipped near residential areas. And as Mississauga showed, it was only a matter of time until a derailment caused an accident that could jeopardize the lives of hundreds.

Given the frequency of derailments, the potential threat they pose and the incident at Mississauga, Transport Minister Don Mazankowski has had no alternative but to call for a Canadian Transport Commission inquiry into the standards governing the construction and maintenance of rail lines and rail cars, the movement of dangerous chemicals and the installation of warning devices. New standards are urgently needed.

SALTing the error

The foul-up Friday that sent American and Canadian fighter jets aloft to fend off a Soviet missile attack reinforces one of the worst possible nightmares — that a nuclear confrontation between the superpowers could be started accidentally.

The episode bore a faint resemblance to the old book, Fail Safe, in which military authorities are unable to stop an American bomber accidentally deployed on mission to drop nuclear warheads on a Russian city.

It is some consolation, but not a lot, to hear Canadian defense department officials say that they knew within 45 seconds that the North American Air Command alert originating in NORAD headquarters in Colorado was false. The warning, according to officials in Ottawa, did not come through in the proper form.

In terms of modern warfare, it appears 45 seconds can be nothing short of an eternity. Within that time the alert had been received, and jets stationed at Comox on Vancouver Island and several western U.S. airforce bases were in the air. The recall orders to the fighter pilots came six minutes after the alert test message had been accidentally transmitted by a computer.

The alert did have a brighter side. American and Canadian defense systems were shown publicly to be at the ready, although it seems somewhat humorous that five out of the seven Canadian Forces 101 Voodoos took to the air unarmed. People and systems do exist to detect a false computer print-out. The mistake was detected long before there was any potential for confrontation.

The unnerving part is, of course, the potential that could lie with a more serious computer error.

To suggest that humans and their computers can be made completely infallible is wishful thinking. And as long as the covert hostility between the superpowers, and the resulting arms stockpiling continue unabated, the possiblity of 'errors' increases.

The proposed Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty between the United States and the Soviet Union will soon be before the Senate for debate. SALT II is a gentle step towards halting the arms race.

SALT treaties will not eliminate the possiblity of a nuclear holocast, but they should ease international tension and diminish the probability of errors that are beyond fail-safe systems.

RICHARD GWYN

Nobody listened to Ontario

OTTAWA — Probably because he was substituting for the absent Rene Levesque, and so was the only non-premier present, Quebec Energy Minister Yves Berube said little during the private meeting of the first ministers at 24 Sussex. Yet when he did say something, Berube said more in less time than did any of his seniors.

"This is a blend," said Berube on one occasion, wrinkling his nose as politely as he could after he had taken his first sip of Ontario's finest, Inniskillen white wine, picked out specially by Prime Minister Joe Clark.

"Ontario's problem," said Berube on another occasion, talking across the table to Ontario Premier Bill Davis, "is that nobody likes you."

Tossed aside

There, Berube had said all that needs to be said about Tuesday's energy conference — not about Ontario wine necessarily, but certainly about Ontario. Ontario, in the person of Davis, came to the conference to plead its case to the country. And nobody listened.

By the day's end, Davis looked like a Hush Puppy that had been stomped on. Or worse, that had been tossed casually aside. He smiled still, but the corners of his mouth ended in a downward curve. He plugged away still, saying things like, "Our principles are beginning to be accepted," but his voice has lost its conviction.

Davis had fired his best shots against any oil price increase at all. Statistics. An increase as proposed, of $4 a barrel would cost each Canadian family $700 a year. Rhetoric. "We need Made In Canada prices." Prophecy. "We are risking a national recession." Patriotism. "Why should we forfeit our independence by tying ourselves to world prices?"

He did his best to offend no one. "What is good for the economy of Ontario is good, ultimately, for all of Canada." He did his best to appeal to everyone. "It ($4 a barrel increase) would be unjust, unnecessary, and damaging to the Canadian economy, if not to the fabric of Confederation."

And still nobody listened. Had Davis preached in Swahili he would have won as many converts among his fellow-premiers.

Each of the premiers had his own reasons for not listening. As oil producers, Alberta and Saskatchewan's self-interests are self-evident. So, almost as evident, are those of Newfoundland as a potential producer.

As fellow-westerners, British Columbia and Manitoba added their voices to those of Alberta and Saskatchewan. So did, less loudly, the three Maritime provinces: they will lose in higher prices, partly offset by federal subsidies, but gain in higher equalization payments. So did, loudly and clearly and most importantly, Quebec. Putting principle ahead of price, Berube told the conference of Quebec's conviction, "that the provinces have an exclusive right to ownership of their natural resources."

BILL DAVIS

Without Quebec as an ally, unlike the past partnership between these industrial provinces, Davis could not hold the centre. He warned that oil prices must not become "a weapon for settling old scores between regions." In reply, Newfoundland Premier Brian Peckford warned, "It is imperative that we stop living in our present dream world, thinking we can isolate ourselves from the economic conditions which prevail in the world."

Around the circular table, covered in blue baize the night before after technicians had warned that on TV its original green would make the premiers look ill, each First Minister but Davis agreed with Peckford. This nine to one count, which is as close as any conference ever gets to a consensus, left Clark free to make his choice about oil prices between, as he later told the Commons, "whether to ignore realities, or to face them." Or no choice at all.

This humbling of Ontario represents as decisive a change in the character of Confederation as that caused by the election of the Parti Quebec on Nov. 15, 1976, or by Quebec's initial Quiet Revolution back in 1960.

Sagging centre

This time, the centre will sag — Ontario directly, Quebec indirectly — while the regions will rise. At one and the same time, Clark's oil policy will send Alberta's Heritage Fund soaring to $20 billion by 1985, and could, as New Democrat Leader Ed Broadbent said in the Commons, "completely destroy the industrial heartland of Ontario."

It's early yet to guess at the extent of the transformation that will take place within Confederation. Davis talked of "massive inter-regional flows (of funds)." British Columbia's Bill Bennett said, "Nothing should stand in the way of the movement of people across this country."

About the reason why Davis lost his fight for Ontario, though, there's no need to guess. A week ago, Peckford said it almost as well as did Berube at 24 Sussex. "Two things hold this country together," said Peckford at a Newfoundland political rally. "Everybody hates Air Canada coffee, and everybody hates Ontario."

Research direction

"From-time-to-time, I read in Times that some historians are seeking information and data on loggers strikes and unions, which took place in the early 1930's on Vancouver Island. Being a retired logger of Up-Island logging camps, I should like to suggest they acquire the following books that would provide the required information on this topic:

"Tough Timber," was written by Myrtle Bergren; published by; Progress Books, 44 Stafford St., Toronto 3, Ontario, Canada.

This book is written in chronological order of woodworkers' strikes from 1920 up-to 1946; it tells about the triumphs and failures of the Industrial Workers of the World (IWW, or so-called Wobbly) of mid-30's strikes.

Then in 1937, the International Woodworkers of America, (IWA-CIO) began to organize all the skilled and unskilled lumberworkers into one union in B.C.

On May 15, 1946, the IWA declared a general strike in the woodworking industry in B.C., and won a 40-hour workweek.

Myrtle Bergren lived in the logging community of Lake Cowichan, Vancouver Island, when she wrote Tough Timber. She also wrote many articles to Victoria Colonist, Vancouver Daily Province, and Western Producer. Many of her writings had been read over the CBC.

Another interesting book on lumbering is: "This Was Sawmilling," written by Ralf W. Andrews; published by, Bonanza Books, New York, U.S.A.

This book is well illustrated with powered waterwheel sawmills of the early days; as were used in the Pacific Northwest region. It includes the first sawmill on Vancouver Island, at Sooke, B.C. As early as 1853, this sawmill provided much lumber for builders in Victoria.

Another interesting sawmill to export lumber was built in Port Alberni, B.C. in 1860. It was a first mill in B.C. to export the lumber abroad.

As the years went by, these sawmills were replaced with the steam and electric power.

There are a number of other books on lumbering in B.C., which could be obtained through some research.

I am wishing every success to the present historians on this subject. After all, about fifty per cent of our income in B.C. is dervived from wood-product, once so-called, "The Green Gold." — F. J. Bogdanski, 4020 Magdelin Street.

Left out

We suggest, with respect, that the Minister of Municipal Affairs, Bill Vander Zalm, chairman of the Urban Transit Commission, should congratulate his members on catching up with Kipling. "East is East and West is West and never the twain shall meet." Example: — Here in Victoria the buses on the East side go as far as Gordon Head. On the West side via Glanford the route was extended to Royal Oak. Only a mile or so separates them and yet Cordova Bay can have no part of any public transport which would integrate with the Urban system. For years we have suggested that they rotate in some sort of loop through or near Cordova Village, perhaps through Broadmead, a matter of only a mile. The late Rudyard K knew our street cars and we wish he could come back and put some pep into our present public transportation. It would save a lot of gas. — Clarence Goode, 4690 Cordova Bay Road.

Convinced

For over 20 years Canadians from coast-to-coast have wondered whether or not, the then 14-year-old Steven Truscott raped and murdered the then 12-year-old Lynne Harper on June 9, 1959, near Clinton, Ontario.

As one of those wondering Canadians, particularly one who has seriously weighed out the bizarre Truscott-Harper mystery, I must confess that I am completely convinced Steven Truscott did not harm Lynne Harper in any way. I am also convinced that somewhere - unless fate has been just - the person or persons responsible for the murder of Lynne Harper, will forever, see the young face of Lynne Harper everywhere, day or night, until the grim-reaper comes a-calling - and maybe after, as well. — John Wickstrom, 3264 Shelley Street.

A tough time for Eskimos

By ANDREW H. MALCOLM

FROBISHER BAY, Northwest Territories — Graffiti, that anonymous social barometer so popular from the subways of New York to the public hallways of the Arctic, cover the siding of a store doorway where Eskimo youths congregate each afternoon.

There is the usual collection of initials and names vowing eternal love and boasting of their bearers' presence on a particular date. And then, about teenager-tall, there is a stark scream scratched in wood: "I wish I kill myself like hell."

That handwriting on the wall tells a tale of unseen conflict that grips many people in northern towns like this one 200 miles from the Arctic Circle. In dozens of interviews, officials, students, police officers, teachers and parents provided evidence of the wrenching of the individual and the social structure that occurs when two cultures — one brought in by the modern, affluent whites from southern Canada and the other the heritage of the Eskimos of the north — meet and mingle.

For one, group change is the norm. "It's what makes life interesting," a Mountie remarked. For the other, change is new, and the transformation from dogsleds to jet planes in 15 years is bewildering and frightening to those following traditional ways.

This situation, which contributed last year to a dozen suicides in Frobisher Bay, a town of only 2,600 people, goes largely ignored in the rest of Canada, where the vast, romantic north still holds its grip on the popular imagination as the storehouse of resources and potential for the future.

The Northwest Territories, greatly reduced since the 19th century, when they belonged to the Hudson's Bay Company, still cover a third of Canada — 1.3 million square miles, an area larger than India. Yet the population of 43,000 would not fill a good-size football stadium.

The 23,000 Eskimos of Canada, about a quarter of the world's total, are feeling increased ethnic awareness. They prefer to call themselves Inuit, which means "the People" in their language, Inuktitut, instead of Eskimo, which whites popularized and which means "eater of raw meat" (the change is roughly analagous to the use of "black" rather than "Negro" in the United States). They live scattered in towns and camps above the tree line across the top of North America, where they combine their hunting and handicraft skills with welfare and government largesse to eke out an existence in a climate as harsh and unforgiving of mistakes as it was when their ancestors came from Asia 4,000 years ago.

They remained largely ignored by the government until the 1950s, when the authorities began herding them from their rough nomadic camps into rough permanent settlements like Frobisher Bay, originally an American air base. There they have had access to medical care, schools, telecommunications and a range of government services designed to give them a decent living and the ability to cope in a modern wage economy. But things have not always worked out the way the planners expected.

"I knew my Dad as a proud and independent hunter, the master of his own destiny," said John Amagoalik, a 31-year-old rights leader, "but a few years after we moved I saw alcohol, the resource-exploration boom and town life reduce these proud people to beggars outside a bar."

"What we've done here," said Bryan Pearson, the mayor of Frobisher, "is to build a pseudo-southern Canadian town with many of the faults and few of the plusses." As an example, an Inuit woman with fresh seal at home buys frozen pizza and licorice.

The family structure, which Amagoalik calls "the foundation of our society," was weakened. Fathers, relieved of their primary responsibility — to assure the family's survival by the hunt — also found their lack of modern skills a barrier to employment. The schools relieved them of the traditional role of teaching their sons hunting and survival techniques. Many took to drink.

The children, also relieved of their traditional chores and responsibilities, were sent to school, sometimes hundreds of miles from home for months at a time. At no cost to their families they were housed and generously fed. They learned English, perhaps forgot some of their native tongue and tasted and came to take for granted some of a new world's delights. The linguistic-cultural gaps left many far behind. "We've got 21-year-old high school juniors," a teacher said, "and they can't read or subtract."

"Vandalism and break-ins are the biggest problems," said Inspector Lloyd Dunham of the RCMP. "The parents let these kids wander around at all hours. They just don't discipline them."

In Inuit camps children have always been free to wander anywhere. There were no street-lights or windows to shatter, and open confrontations like those between angry parent and misbehaving child were to be avoided. Punishment was saved for such serious offences as failing to share.

For many whites the Arctic can be a starkly beautiful though often menacing land. The land and the harsh climate are things to be conquered briskly with roads, radar, radio beacons and determination.

For many Eskimos the land is a special place. It rewards patience, not rush. It is the source of all life, a home with predictable rules and familiar creatures, of which man is only one.

Have you listened lately to your children's music?

By MICHELE LANDSBERG
Toronto Star

"Don't you think 12 is too young to go to dances?" asked the plaintive mother's voice on the phone. "Why should the junior high school push all these youngsters into sexual awareness so early?"

Ask the tides to roll back, madam; ask the leaves to jump back on to the maple trees. That would be easier than to shield your child from the glutinous swamp of the sexploitation culture in which we live. School dances are the least of it.

We live and breathe the stuff, inescapably. You can't have Farah Fawcett or her clones wobbling their assets across the ninny-box every night without the message being printed in your child's brain.

That's free enterprise: Drown the kiddies in pop porn, inundate them with the mammary obsessions of the admen, make a billion selling them sex and sadism pressed on vinyl, but heavens to Betsy, keep Margaret Laurence out of the high schools.

Have you listened lately? Late last Saturday night, I watched TV as rock singer Rick James leaped about in his skinny-tights, screaming: "If you don't want it, I'm gonna f--- you right outa the door" (he didn't use dashes). His backup singers, two tartly dressed little skimps, joyously squealed, "Pull my trigger!" as James declared his intention to shoot them with his love gun.

I was startled enough to launch a little investigation of my own into the music our youngest adolescents are buying these days. With the help of some knowledgeable young clerks at Sam the Record Man, I selected and listened to a bundle of the most popular rock and disco music, and learned that it relies almost exclusively on themes of drug use (It's lucky for the simple-minded lyricists that "smoke" and "toke" rhyme) and grossly explicit macho sex.

Mind you, I didn't include the extremist punk rockers in my survey. And I'm not even going to be able to quote Frank Zappa, the one-man Gong Show of rock, who made his millions by musically pulling down his rompers (favorite themes, spewed with indescribable venom: woman-hatred, oral sex, anal rape and gonorrhea).

No, I stuck to middle-of-the-road music. And what's top of the pops? The multiple female orgasm. Female climaxes are featured on at least six of the 30 records I listened to, always with rhythmic panting, drum-beats, moaning paroxysms and screams. Amidst the cacophony, an astute listener will hear filthy subliminal tidbits.

A typical version, played at school dances, is this one by a female group: "Push, push/In the bush. Push, push/In the bush. I like to do it, I like to do what you like to do. So baby let's go to it. (Girls chanting rhythmically:) Are you ready? Do you like it? Do you like it like this?"

The album jackets sum it all up: Women holding champagne bottles between their legs, half-naked women in chains, wet-lipped women, parts of women, a woman with a wad of bubble-gum being pulled off her naked breast, a naked, headless woman holding a TV set in front of her torso (the record is called The Tube), a woman's croteh menaced by a huge hairy spider. Acres of the stuff.

"Exploitation of women does make money," shrugged a store clerk. "And, since rock music is an expression of teenage lust, aggression and frustration and is heavily dominated by males, of course it's anti-woman."

The big issue to him, and to others knowledgeable about the music industry, is the mass manipulation of the teenage market.

"The record companies and the radio stations excercise total mind control over the kids," he said. "It's only one step away from 1984."

Censorship isn't the answer. You might as well try to censor the polluted air the kids breathe. Record-banning, like any other witch-hunt, would only reinforce the music's rebellious glamor. In fact, parental disgust is an essential and much-desired element in the music; rock "artists" long to be banned so they will become instant millionaires like the Rolling Stones.

Nor do I think teenagers will rush out to perform unnatural acts after listening to their daily dose of mind-numbing decibles.

No, the danger lies much more in the sick, distorted sex-role images the kids are soaking in through their pores. Never in history has there been such a massive propaganda campaign, avidly lapped up by very young and impressionable girls, promoting the image of woman as a moaning, slavish, manipulative, adoring, masochistic lump of quivering flesh.

Sound exaggerated? Listen to the songs your youngsters hear on radio. I can't quote the lyrics in a self-respecting newspaper. But I can tell you that the commonplace vocabulary of teenage music is the four-letter word (all of them) and that the common theme is either sneering abuse of women ("If you won't ---- me, baby, Well ---- off. You ain't nothing but a ---- tease") or the hysterical, grovelling pleas from women begging for sexual attack.

How do 13- and 14-year-old girls feel, in the company of boys at school dances, hearing amplified female orgasms blasted over the PA? And how do they feel when the lyrics tell them, in brutal language, that resistance to sexual coarseness is just "uptight" repressed prissiness?

Despite its power and pervasiveness, I don't think this music, drenched in sadomasochistic imagery, needs to win the day. The best line of defence against it is the alert parent, not the angry one who reacts when it's too late.

In homes where sex is discussed early and openly, and all stereotypes are debunked, kids don't need sick images or the naughty thrill of dirty lyrics. In homes where critical skills are encouraged from the start (argument, debate, good conversation, probing at the status quo), the adolescents are likely to be clear-eyed and aware.

Maybe there's a sucker born every minute, but your child doesn't have to be one of them.

The ship of followers

Leadership.

What kind of leadership?

Strong, effective and dynamic leadership.

What is necessary for the country to satisfy its appetite for strong, effective and dynamic leadership?

A president who can lead.

Where does the country want to be led?

In Washington.

Let me rephrase the question using worser grammar: Where does the country want to be led to?

The country does not want to be led to. It wants to be led in.

Led in what?

In direction.

Can you elucidate?

The country wants to be led in direction of restoration of American greatness, as well as directions of revival of the American spirit and re-establishment of America's position of respect in the world.

Do I assume correctly, then, that the country wants to be led back toward that past that is commonly sentimentalized in the misleading phrase, "the good old days"?

Nonsense. The country wants to be led toward new directions. It yearns for new leadership with a new vision of a new era.

If led, will the country follow?

If given the right kind of leadership, the country will surely follow.

Which kind of leadership is the right kind?

The leadership that leads the country towards directions it wants to take.

And what specific directions does the country want to take?

Who knows? That's for the leader to figure out. If he is the right kind of leader, he will guess correctly.

Which direction does the country yearn to be led in the matter of abortion?

North, south, east, west, and all points in between.

Would you guess that a leader would not have much followership if he tried to lead in this matter?

In somethings the country doesn't want to be led.

What about a leader who decides to stop the dollar hemmorhage by taxing gasoline at a dollar per gallon?

Not much chance of that. Carter tried to add two cents a gallon to the tax and got clobbered by Congress. No leader can lead long if he tries funneling the gasoline gouge back to Washington instead of shipping it abroad to OPEC.

Then what should a leader propose in the way of leadership if he wants to remain strong, effective and dynamic?

He should find out what the country wants him to propose and then propose it.

Are there any important matters, either foreign or domestic, on which the country clamors for its leadership to make proposals?

Hundreds of them.

In Soviet-American relations, for example, what proposal made by a leader would earn him countrywide followership?

None. Some people in the country would follow him on one proposal, and others would abandon the wagon train. On another proposal the followership might split off in different propostions.

Are you quite sure that the country wants leadership?

That's what all the polls say.

If the country wants leadership, why is it so difficult to identify a single goal toward which it wants to be led in either foreign or domestic affairs?

That's wrong. The country wants peace.

Hasn't it had peace throughout President Carter's administration?

Sure, but it hasn't been strong, effective and dynamic peace. Anyhow the country also wants a strong dollar and Carter hasn't supplied one. What measures for strengthening the dollar would, if taken by Carter, enjoy the country's followership?

That's a silly question. The country's so divided about economics that nothing Carter proposes could get past Congress, so there's no point in his proposing anything.

Am I wrong in concluding that it isn't leadership the country wants in a president, but followership?

It doesn't hurt a leader any if he avoids trying to lead on things that get people upset, which is just about everything. But that still doesn't mean the country doesn't want leadership.

How can you have a strong leader if he spends all his energy trying to follow the led?

The trick is in making good chin music. He's got to stick out that jaw and sound like a leader, and if he makes enough noise he can get away with it for two or three years before everybody starts yearning for leadership all over again. You can't fool all of the people all of the time, but if you make a good noise you can come pretty close for a few years.

Americans earn more, but take-home's less

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans are earning more and making less than they were 10 years ago, says a new study which shows that the after-tax, after-inflation median income for a typical U.S. family is smaller than it was in 1969.

The study was conducted by the Tax Foundation Inc., a non-profit research group with headquarters in Washington, D.C.

The foundation said that from 1969 to 1979, the median income for all U.S. families with a single, full-time wage earner almost doubled to $18,467 from $9,277.

The group figured out how much federal income tax and Social Security would be due on the median income for a married couple with two children. It calculated that the after-tax income for the family went to $15,546 from $7,947.

Next, the foundation adjusted the 1979 figure for inflation, as measured by the Consumer Price Index, and it found that real income — in terms of 1969 dollars — was only $7,800, almost $150 less or two per cent less than in 1969.

These statistics don't take state and local taxes into account and they have been rising even faster than U.S. government taxes in most places.

The turning point for the typical family with a median income came in 1972, the Tax Foundation said. Until then, real income rose steadily, reaching a peak of $8,500 seven years ago.

Since then, income taxes for the family used in the foundation calculations have risen 82 per cent and Social Security taxes 142 per cent, while prices have increased 75 per cent. It all adds up to an eight-per-cent drop in actual purchasing power since 1972.

Copper price rises

Asarco Inc. said it is raising the domestic spot selling price of electrolytic copper by three cents to $1 a pound for cathodes on a delivered basis, effective immediately. Phelps Dodge Corp. also announced a price of $1 a pound for whole-plate electrolytic copper cathodes, up five cents.

Newmont Mining Corp. said its unit, Magma Copper Co., also is increasing the price for electrolytic copper full-plate cathodes to $1 a pound, up four cents. The three companies said premiums for special cathode shapes remain unchanged.

In Houston, Pennzoil Co. said its Duval Corp. mining unit raised the price of refined copper four cents to $1 a pound, effective immediately. As a result, Bristol Brass Co. said it will adjust its base prices of all mill products, except free-cutting brass rod, to reflect an increase in copper of four cents a pound to $1 a pound.

Revere Copper and Brass Co. said it is adjusting its published base prices for all copper and copper alloy mill products, except free cutting brass and forging rod and copper tube and related items, to reflect new copper prices of 98 cents a pound, up three cents.

Several Canadian companies also announced increases. Noranda Mines Ltd. said it has raised its price for copper cathode sold in Canada to $1.19 (Canadian) a pound from $1.12, and in the U.S. to $1 (U.S.) a pound from 95 cents.

Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co. said in Toronto it raised its price for copper sold in Canada to $1.18 (Canadian) a pound from $1.12 and in the U.S. also to $1 (U.S.) a pound from 95 cents.

Inco Ltd. matched Noranda Mines' increase for Canadian sales to $1.19 a pound, up seven cents. There was no mention of a U.S. price increase.

ROOKIE Gary Minor had good trip to Atlanta Tuesday as he made his debut with Vancouver Canucks and club responded with three goals in third period for 5-3 victory over Flames in National Hockey League game. Minor also had a normal-type trip to ice when he spilled over David Shand (8) of the Flames while pursuing puck on this first-period play. (AP wirephoto).

Fraser sparks Canuck charge over Flames

By The Associated Press

Vancouver Canucks seem to be saving their best for last this season.

"The third period has been a good period for us all year," says Vancouver coach Harry Neale. "We just seem to start getting something done in that period."

The Canucks got it all done Tuesday night with three late goals en route to a 5-3 National Hockey League victory over Atlanta Flames.

"Our workmanship and effort were good," said Neale. "Consistency in that area will win you a lot of games."

Curt Fraser scored two goals in that last period, including the first one that unlocked a 2-2 tie. Rick Blight later added an empty-net goal for the Canucks' final score.

The victory increased Vancouver's lead in the Smythe Division to four points over St. Louis Blues, 5-2 losers to Montreal Canadiens.

"Last year we were young and worked hard and did a lot of learning," said Fraser. "Harry Neale has a good system going for us. The third period is our good period. If we get past the first period, we do OK."

In other NHL action, New York Islanders routed New York Rangers 10-5, Edmonton Oilers defeated Washington Capitals 5-3, and Los Angeles Kings trimmed Colorado Rockies 4-1.

Fraser put both his third-period goals past Atlanta goalie Dan Bouchard. His second goal, which actually proved to be the game-winner, came on assists from Bill Derlago and Kevin McCarthy. His first goal of the night was a 10-foot shot from the right side.

"We let them take the game away from us," said Atlanta Coach Al MacNeil. "They outhustled us in our own building. That's inexcusable and I can't accept that. We were bad."

Rejean Houle scored three goals and Richard Sevigny made a sparkling NHL debut, stepping in for injured goalie Dennis Herron, as Montreal beat St. Louis.

Houle backhanded a shot past St. Louis goalie Mike Liut after a solo effort just 46 seconds into the game. Five minutes later, he made it 2-0 when his close-in shot deflected into the goal off Liut's stick.

Houle, who scored three goals in a game for the third time in his career and raised his total to six this season, made it 3-1 in the second period, deflecting a shot by Danny Geoffrion into the net.

Sevigny, 22, was called up from Montreal's Nova Scotia farm club in the American Hockey League earlier Tuesday. He stopped 23 shots and the only goal he yielded was by Jack Brownschidle with 50 seconds remaining.

Defenceman Stefan Persson set up two power-play scores, then tallied to cap a six-goal second period explosion as the Islanders overwhelmed the Rangers.

Denis Potvin, Bryan Trottier and Billy Harris scored two goals apiece.

Ron Chipperfield scored once and assisted on another goal to help Edmonton beat Washington and snap a four-game losing streak.

Mike Murphy scored two goals and Marcel Dionne, the NHL's leading scorer, had one goal and one assist as Los Angeles defeated Colorado. The victory enabled the Kings to maintain their unbeaten record over the Rockies since the team joined the NHL.

WILLIE STARGELL
... Pittsburgh's leader

NEW YORK (AP) — Both Willie Stargell, Pittsburgh Pirates' 38-year-old wonder, and young Keith Hernandez of St. Louis Cardinals said they were satisfied with sharing the National League's most valuable player award for the 1979 season.

But did either one really deserve it outright or not at all?

The 24-man voting committee — two from each of the NL's 12 cities — of the Baseball Writers Association of America, said there was no separating the two players in total points. In the balloting, announced Tuesday, each received 216 points.

The breakdown in the voting was quite curious.

Stargell received 10 first-place votes, three seconds, four thirds, one fourth and two sixths. But what is difficult to comprehend is that four writers completely ignored him, meaning they did not think he was even among the 10 most valuable players in the league.

Hernandez, on the other hand, was the only player named on all 24 ballots, collecting only four firsts, but eight seconds, seven thirds, two fourths and three fifths.

A first-place vote was worth 14 points, with nine for second, eight for third, and so on.

The Cardinals' first baseman played in all but one of his team's 162 games, led the NL in batting with a .344 average, in doubles with 48 and in runs scored with 116, was second in hits with 210, tied for third in game-winning hits with 16 and fifth in runs batted in with 105. He also hit 11 triples and 11 home runs in 610 at-bats.

Stargell, used judiciously by Pittsburgh manager Chuck Tanner, appeared in 126 games, had 424 at-bats, 60 runs scored, 119 hits, 19 doubles, no triples, 32 homers, 82 RBIs and batted .281.

But the Pirates won the NL East Division championship, and Stargell was their inspirational leader and key man down the stretch.

Not coincidentally, the four writers who failed to recognize Stargell on their ballots — Mike Littwin of the Los Angeles Times, Tim Tucker of the Atlanta Journal, Kenny Hand of the Houston Post and Harry Shattuck of the Houston Chronicle — all covered Western Division teams and did not see the Pirates' slugger play after Aug. 29.

Littwin, Tucker and Hand all thought the Pirates had a more valuable player than Stargell. Littwin's choice was relief ace Kent Tekulve. Tucker's selection was centre fielder Omar Moreno, and Hand preferred right fielder Dave Parker.

Wrangler goalie superb while frustrating Cougars

Warren Skorodenski of Wranglers came up with a superb effort to win a goaltending battle Tuesday and lead the Calgary club to a 4-2 win over Victoria Cougars in a Western Hockey League game at Calgary.

Skorodenski finished the evening with 32 saves.

Cougar netminder Grant Fuhr also sparkled as he blocked shots.

Brad Yachimec and Bud McCarthy replied for Victoria.

With the victory, Calgary grabbed first place in the Eastern Division with an 11-3-0 record. Cougars, Western Divison leaders, are also 13-3-0 and hold a four-point margin over Portland Winter Hawks.

In other games, Brandon Wheat Kings broke a 1-1 tie with two third-period goals and defeated visiting Medicine Hat Tigers 3-1 while Regina Pats got four goals from Doug Wickenheiser in an 8-5 win over host Billings Bighorns.

In another WHL development, Tigers have been fined $700 for their actions in a penalty-filled game against Pats on Sunday.

League executive-director Dave Descent said Medicine Hat coach Pat Ginnell was fined $200 for pulling his team off the ice during the first period.

The team was fined an additional $500 for having a player leave the bench to join in a fight. Forward Brian Ziegler was suspended for five games for being the first player off the bench.

More than 200 penalty minutes were assessed in the game, which the visiting Tigers lost 13-3.

Darryl's dream dunker was a shattering sight

By Associated Press

It was a night, and sight, to remember.

"I think this is Darryl's lifelong dream — to shatter a backboard," said Philadelphia guard Doug Collins.

That's exactly what Darryl Dawkins, the muscular, 6-foot-11, 258-pound, 22-year-old who plays centre for the 76ers, did in a National Basketball Association game Tuesday night in Kansas City.

And he did it in typical Dawkins fashion — spectacular. It came straight from the Gus Johnson school of board-breaking.

It happened early in the third quarter with Kansas City leading 49-45. Dawkins took a lob pass from Maurice Cheeks and turned to the basket. The only Kansas City player nearby, forward Bill Robinzine, ducked for safety. It was a good idea.

Dawkins went up for one of those high-percentage shots he calls "Go-Rilla Dunks." If you have to ask why he uses that name, you've never seen him throw it down.

But even Dawkins had never seen what happened next.

As he dunked the ball, his hands made contact with the iron rim of the basket. Suddenly the fiberglass backboard shattered into hundreds of tiny pieces and the whole thing crashed to the floor.

"His arms were inside the rim. The backboard first exploded, then it just dropped," said referee Bill Oakes. "It was a little scary. This is the first time I've ever seen anything like it in 25 years of playing and officiating."

The shattered glass showered both Dawkins and Robinzine. Dawkins was unhurt while Robinzine was cut on a hand.

Dawkins' massive dunk bent the support pole that holds up the basket and backboard, and the pole broke while workers tried to attach a new backboard. The game was delayed one hour, 13 minutes while new apparatus was installed.

Despite Dawkins' colossal basket, Kansas City Kings won the game 110-103, snapping a six-game losing streak. Phil Ford led the way with 34 points.

In other NBA games, San Antonio Spurs edged Golden State Warriors 131-127 in overtime, Houston Rockets trimmed Chicago Bulls 128-127, Los Angeles Lakers routed San Diego Clippers 137-91, Milwaukee Bucks beat Portland Trail Blazers 101-92, Washington Bullets defeated New York Knicks 111-107, Denver Nuggets trimmed Cleveland Cavaliers 116-110 and New Jersey Nets topped Atlanta Hawks 101-92.

Yankee trade blocked

NEW YORK (AP) — Baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn's office today blocked the trade sending third-baseman Eric Soderholm to New York Yankees from Texas Rangers because names of three minor leaguers involved in the deal were released.

Minor league rosters are currently frozen and players on them cannot be traded until after the major league draft, scheduled for Dec. 3 at the winter meetings in Toronto.

The Yankees announced the Soderholm trade Tuesday, saying they had acquired the veteran third baseman from the Rangers for "players to be named later." But then Texas released the names of the three minor leaguers New York had packaged — pitchers Roger Slagle and Ricky Burdette and infielder Amos Lewis.

Because of the frozen roster situation, that violated major league rules and Alexander H. Hadden, Kuhn's counsel, ordered the trade held up, at least for the moment. The action was taken with the commissioner in Japan, accompanying two teams of major league all-stars on an exhibition tour.

It's a lode search, not cat-and-mouse

By WILL GRIMSLEY

NEW YORK (AP) — Tennis' heavyweights aren't playing a cat-and-mouse game as do their boxing counterparts, insists Bjorn Borg — they're just grubbing for the sport's mother lode.

"I don't purposely duck John McEnroe, Jimmy Connors or anybody else, and I am sure they don't dodge me," said Borg, the world's recognized No. 1 player. "It's just the way our schedules fall."

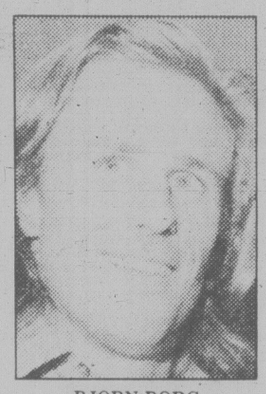
The 23-year-old Swede was in New York briefly Monday to accept another trophy and a $10,000 cheque as the men's tennis winner in the Seven Crowns of Sports competition. It marks the third time he has won it.

The competition is sponsored by Seagrams.

Borg is in good company. Among others honored are Tom Watson in golf, Fred Lynn in baseball, Walter Payton in pro football and Guy Lafleur in hockey.

Borg, en route from a Pacific tour to his home in Monte Carlo, paused long enough to answer those critics who contend that men's tennis suffers because the star performers — principally the Big Three of Borg, McEnroe and Connors — rarely meet, except in major championships.

As a case in point, while Borg was heading for the Mediterranean, Connors was winding up a tournament in Hong Kong and McEnroe was beating fellow American Gene Mayer in Stockholm.



BJORN BORG
... doesn't dodge rivals

"If there were fewer tournaments, we would face each other more often," Borg said. "But with promoters willing to put up so much money, and as long as they insist on name players, you naturally are going to see the top players split up.

"It's more practical for the sponsors. It's financially better for the players. But we don't work it out among ourselves. Individually, we just make out our schedules and let them happen."

The next confrontation of the king and his chief challengers probably will be in the Grand Prix Masters at Madison Square Garden in January, Then there will be the early summer WCT Final in Dallas, followed by Wimbledon and the U.S. Open. It's a mad circle.

"There may be a few other tournaments where two of us meet, or maybe all three," Bjorn said.

Borg has a 3-2 lead this year over the 20-year-old McEnroe (they are 3-3 for their careers), and 4-0 over Connors, having given Jimmy a straight-set lacing recently in Tokyo.

Borg, whose topspin thunderbolts and unflappable court demeanor have made him a sports institution, said he would play a few exhibitions in Europe and spend the month of December on the Riviera with his fiancee, Mariana Simionescu, relaxing and practicing for the Masters.

He said his top priority for 1980 is to win the U.S. Open, a title that has escaped him although he has won four straight Wimbledons.

"It isn't the surface," he said. "I have had bad luck. In 1977, I defaulted to Dick Stockton because of a bad shoulder. In 1978 I had a bad thumb when I lost to Connors. This year, Tanner beats me — no excuse. But I am determined to win."

Forest buys Brighton ace

LONDON (AP) — Brighton, the last place team in the English League First Division, has accepted an offer of $1.2 million from Nottingham Forest for striker Peter Ward.

Ward, who set a club record of 36 goals for Brighton in the 1976-77 soccer season, has scored only four times in 15 games this season and had asked for a transfer.

Ward new pilot

CHICAGO (AP) — Pete Ward, former Chicago White Sox third baseman, is the new manager of the club's Triple A Iowa affiliate, the American League baseball team has announced.

U.S. takes lead

TORONTO (CP) — Norman Dello Joio gave the United States its first victory at the Royal Horse Show on Tuesday night and helped the Americans into first place in team standings.

Riding Johny's Pocket, Dello Joio easily won a two-way jumpoff over Swiss rider Thomas Fuchs on Tullis Lass in the International Hit-and-Hurry competition to pick up 10 points for the effort.

Combined with a fourth-place tie of team members Terry Rudd and Melanie Smith, the U.S. now has 52 points. Canada is next with 48, followed by Switzerland with 45 and Britain with 39.

New curling format set for B.C. playdowns

By BILL WALKER

The Pacific Coast Curling Association and the B.C. Curling Association are only going half-way this year in their joint plan for a new provincial playoff in the Labatt's Tankard competition.

The "Tankard" is the new name for the "Consols" and was chosen because of its traditional connection with curling and maybe the new sponsor as well.

The Macdonald Tobacco Company gave up sponsorship of the men's curling championship this season and Labatts has taken over.

Macdonalds agreed to the continued use of the Brier name, but asked Labatts to get a new name for the provincial competitions, thus "Tankard".

Last spring, the PCCA proposed a new 16-rink, triple-knockout format with four rinks to qualify from that competition to meet with four from the BCCA in an eight-rink playoff with the winner to represent the province in the Brier.

In the past, the champions of each association met in a best-of-three playoff.

However, president Edd Moyes of the PCCA says his group "would rather walk than run on this one".

Thus the PCCA will retain its eight-rink, double-knockout system for this season but will go ahead with with the change in the B.C. playoff.

Four rinks will qualify out of the PCCA playoff to meet four rinks from the BCCA in an eight-rink, double-knockout final, the winner going to the Brier.

That playoff will take place at the Royal City Curling Club in New Westminster, Feb. 8-10, the week following the PCCA playoff, also scheduled there, Feb. 1-3.

"Next year, I think we will be going to that 16-rink, triple-knockout system," Moyes said.

As in the past, there will be two PCCA berths open from Zone 1 (Vancouver Island and Powell River), two from Zone 2, two from Zone 3 and two from the annual Totem bonspiel.

The Totem takes place in Vancouver, Nov. 22-28, with Burnaby Winter Club as host.

Winner of the Totem will get one PCCA final berth, while the second berth will come from a round-robin competition between the main-event finalist and semi-finalists and all other event winners, providing, of course, they are eligible.

A new event to be held in conjunction with the Totem this year is a Seniors competition. And guess who will be one of the newest members of that August group — none other than former B.C. champion Glen Harper of Duncan, who has reached that magic curling age of 50. From Victoria, of course, the most notable entry is probably Dave Johnston, who has been to the PCCA Seniors final on two occasions.

Curlers also are reminded of several minor rule changes which by now should have been posted on club bulletin boards. It is the curlers' responsibility to make themseves acquainted with the rules.

For instance, did you know that it now is permissible for a team to alter the position of its players from game to game, if it feels it is to its advantage to do so?

And also, the rules are now written to ensure that the offending team can no longer receive a benefit from a burnt stone.

There are others. Read 'em.

Plucky Gray regains title

HALIFAX (CP) — Chris Clarke of Halifax may get a second chance to wrest the Commonwealth welterweight boxing title from Clyde Gray who regained it by a 10th round technical knockout Tuesday night in a spectacular display of speed and determination.

But Irv Ungerman, Gray's manager, said following Tuesday night's upset that he first wants to get a number of things straight with Halifax Athletic Commission if the fight is to be held here.

Gray, the Three Mile Plains, N.S., native who gave up 10 years to the 22-year-old Clarke, overcame a cut eye Tuesday night to take charge of the fight in the sixth round and stop Clarke with a series of uppercuts in the 10th of a scheduled 15-rounder. Referee Bobby Beaton stopped the fight after Clarke was knocked down for the third time.

Gray had hinted that he was considering retirement if he lost Tuesday. But later in the day, Ungerman was talking about a possible fourth world title fight for Gray.

Both Clarke's Commonwealth title and Gray's Canadian crown were on the line in the fight which packed the 11,000-seat Metro Centre with fans anxious to see a repeat of the war the two staged in August when Clarke took the Commonwealth crown.

It was Clarke's first loss in 21 fights but minutes after the fight he came to Clyde's corner and asked for a rematch.

Both Gray and Ungerman agreed but the manager said he was talking "different turkey from here on in" after his treatment at the hands of the Halifax Athletic Commission.

Ungerman declined to be specific but referred generally to an incident at the weigh-in Tuesday when Gray came in a pound over the 147 welterweight limit. There was an argument about the scales and Gray returned a pound lighter.

A third fight here would be lucrative for both.

Clarke pocketed 22.5 per cent of the gate which exceeded the $129,000 August take and Gray got 17.5 per cent this time.

Massive brant boost planned by branch

Fish and Wildlife Branch officials plan to increase the wintering population of brant in British Columbia from 1,000 to approximately 8,500 birds.

This goal — which includes re-establishing a wintering population of 3,500 on the southeast portion of Vancouver Island — is among the objectives outlined in one of the three latest preliminary individual species management plans submitted for public comment by the branch. The other species plans cover grizzly bears and mountain goats.

The brant is a small marine goose that breeds along the Arctic coast and winters to a limited extent on the Queen Charlotte Islands and in Puget Sound. Most, however, spend the winter in Baja California and along the northern mainland coast of Mexico.

Brant fall under the jurisdiction of the international Migratory Birds Convention Act, involving the national governments of Canada, the United States and Mexico, as well as the provincial Wildlife Act.

Between 500 to 1,500 brant spend the winter on the Queen Charlottes but are no longer found in their historical wintering spots on Vancouver Island or in Boundary Bay.

The only brant now found along the Island now are the ones stopping off briefly from Sooke to Campbell River while travelling the late winter and early spring migration routes.

"As eelgrass is the primary food of brant it is used as the main indicator of migration and wintering habitat . . .", states the plan.

"In British Columbia, based on historical occurrence of brant in winter and on what is known of the current distribution of eelgrass, we estimate about 7,800 hectares of potential wintering habitat (Boundary Bay, Roberts Bank, Semiahmoo Bay, Comox Harbor, Seal Islands, Nanoose Harbor, Nanaimo estuary, Sandspit and Masset Inlet).

It goes on to say there will likely be a decrease in quality and quantity of available habitat.

"Shoreline developments, increased recreational use of foreshore areas and the increasing likelihood of oil spills will all adversely affect brant habitat."

Besides increasing the wintering population of brant in the province, the branch plan has two other objectives — to establish more sanctuaries, resting places and viewing areas for brant and to provide for the harvest of surplus birds from wintering and migrating populations of brant.

Since the wintering population will depend on a limited amount of habitat, the first step toward implimenting the objectives will be to determine the exact extent and nutritive quality of eelgrass beds in B.C.

"Most brant habitat is in the estuaries and large bays in the intertidal area. Such areas are often favored spots for log booming, industrial, port and marina development, pleasure boating, sport fishing and beachcombing. The first three items destroy habitat while the latter three may disturb birds temporarily.

"Key areas for brant will have to be protected from the first three and some limits put on the latter three if the disturbance reaches serious proportions."

Such protection could be provided by designating key spots as Wildlife Management Areas.

Organized interest groups and individuals wanting copies of any of the three species plans may obtain them by contacting branch headquarters in Victoria.

Public comments on possible revisions are invited until the end of December and the final plans will form the basis for branch management policy over the next five years.

The opportunity to have a say is there. So take it.

Too Tall Jones chalks up TKO

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Ed (Too Tall) Jones scored a sixth-round technical knockout over Abdullah Muhammad Tuesday night at the Phoenix Civic Plaza.

The crowd of about 4,200, which paid as much as $17 per ticket, booed after most of the rounds and again after referee Bobby Ferrara's TKO decision was announced.

Jones, the former all-pro defensive end of the National Football League Dallas Cowboys, appeared to have won four of the first five rounds — with one even — when he sent Muhammad to the canvas with a right hand that many ringside observers felt was a push.

Forest makes bid to keep Woodcock

NOTTINGHAM, England (Reuter) — Nottingham Forest of English League soccer's First Division agreed Tuesday to transfer England striker Tony Woodcock to F.C. Cologne of West Germany if Woodcock wants the move.

Forest, which agreed to a £650,000 ($1.3 million) transfer fee, at the same time offered Woodcock an improved three-year contract in an attempt to persuade him to stay with the English club.

"I still can't make up my mind what to do," Woodcock said after talks with officials from Cologne and Forest. "I will give a decision before the end of the week, but it's still 50-50 whether I stay or go."

Forest manager Brian Clough said: "It is Tony's decision. I don't want him to go and that is why he has been offered an improved contract, but I would like this sorted out as quickly as possible for the good of everyone concerned."

City players dominate western junior squash

Mike Montgomery won the under-19 boys' title with a 9-2, 9-3, 9-4 decision over Sher Horne in an all-Victoria final. Horne had upset top-seeded Richard Jackson, also of Victoria, in the semi-finals, 3-1.

Andrie Levey of Victoria claimed the under-19 girls' crown with a 9-1, 9-6, 9-3 win over Cathy Covernton in another all-Victoria final.

Bob Ballanger and John Dickie were the other Victorians to win titles.

Ballanger claimed the under-16 title with a 9-5, 9-0, 9-0 victory over Paul Sutton of Vancouver while Dickie captured the under-14 title with a 9-6, 9-0, 9-0 triumph over Tim Ferris of Vancouver.

In consolation play, Alastair Bland of Victoria topped Cam McDonald of Vancouver 3-1 in the under-19 division; Doug MacMinn of Victoria downed Dave Hiddleston of Vancouver 3-1 in the under-16 bracket and Trevor Thom of Victoria tripped Dave Flather of Vancouver 3-1 in the under-14 final.

T. Geddes of Vancouver broke the domination by winning the under-12 boys' title but Justin Robinson of Victoria won the consolation final in the same age group.

Wildcats bounced from soccer chase

Last year's champion will be on the sidelines when 16 qualifiers start play Thursday in the annual British Columbia high school soccer tournament on the lower mainland.

Burnaby Central, winner of the 1978 crown, was eliminated Monday when Carson Graham Eagles defeated the Wildcats 3-2 in the Burnaby-New Westminster-North Shore zone's consolation final.

Carson thus completed the championship lineup.

Vancouver Island will be represented by Mt. Douglas Thistles and Victoria High Tyees (Greater Victoria) along with the Nanaimo and Port Alberni teams that have earned the two Upper Island berths.

Completing the field are Burnaby North Vikings, the top-rated team from the Burnaby-New West-North Shore zone; Vancouver Tech and Steveston (Vancouver); Prince Margaret, Chilliwack and Port Moody (Fraser Valley); North Kamloops and Vernon (Okanagan); Selkirk (Kimberley), Caledonia (Terrace) and Correlieu (Quesnel).

The 16 will be divided into groups of four for a single round-robin preliminary. The top team from each division will qualify for Friday's semi-finals at Swangard Stadium in Burnaby. The final will be played Saturday night.

Arbutus earns title

Arbutus and Colquitz will represent Greater Victoria in the eight-team, single-loss elimination Vancouver Island junior high school boys' soccer tournament, starting Friday at Spencer and Belmont.

Arbutus captured the city title Monday by edging Colquitz, 2-1.

Tournament action gets under way at 3:15 p.m. at both Spencer and Belmont on Friday. Semi-finals are slated for 9:30 a.m. and the final for 12 Saturday at Belmont.

Skillings unbeaten

The Steve Skillings rink remained undefeated in the men's Harley Davidson Series of Curling at the Racquet Club Tuesday with an 8-6 victory over the Bruce Coulter-skipped foursome.

It was the seventh straight win for the Skillings rink which is off to a cash bonspiel in Calgary this weekend. Coulter is 4-3.

Don Matheson (5-2) remained in second place with an 11-4 win over Bob Hawkes (3-4), Brad Clarke (4-3) took over third place with a 6-4 victory over Barry Harvey (2-5), Barry Moore (3-4) defeated Al Frame (2-5) 7-5 and Bill Morris (2-5) won over Tim Horrigan (3-4) 8-4.

Mixed medley relay events

Entry deadline is half an hour before the starting time of 1 p.m. in the 11th annual 21-mile mixed medley relay Sunday, Dec. 2, starting at the Dallas Road portion of Beacon Hill Park.

Sponsored by the Flying "Y" Track Club and meet director Jack Hutchison, the meet features age-class competition in a variety of individual and team categories for both male and female competitors.

Braves extend victory streak

Talk about unstoppable!

Ian McLean, Ron Brooks and Tracy Patterson each scored three goals to lead the Braves to their 14th straight victory. Marty Irvine added two goals and Brian Goodwin contributed a single.

Terry Coughlin was the marksman for Gulls, who trailed by period scores of 6-1 and 8-1.

U.K. immigrant bar hits Canadians, too

LONDON (UPI) — The Conservative government Wednesday announced drastic tightening of immigration laws that will bar foreign-born husbands of British women, including Canadians, from entering the country unless the wife actually was born in the United Kingdom.

The new rules are primarily designed to stem the flow of Asian-born males entering the U.K. to join foreign-born wives who hold British passports, or to marry Asians already living in the country.

Officials estimated the new rules will cut by about 6,000 the annual flow of Asian immigrats.

But the rules also apply to all foreign husbands, including those from traditional partners like Canada, Australia and New Zealand, but do not affect males from European Common Market countries.

The changes, announced in a government white paper, become effective immediately. But the government said they will not be retroactive — meaning that foreign-born husbands already living in Britain will not be expelled.

The new rules said foreign male husbands, or fiancees, will not be admitted to Britain if they had not previously met their intended, or present, wives already living in Britain.

The rule is designed to crack down on arranged marriages between Asians which has resulted in thousands of males entering Britain.

The new regulation also said that in the future elderly parents of British residents will only be allowed into the country if it can be shown they have no other means of support.

Under previous regulations, about 70,000 foreigners were annualy permitted to enter the country as immigraants.

Blacks and Asians account for about 2 million of Britain's 55 million populations, government estimates showed.

Graving Dock fire subdued

A fuel oil leak was blamed for a fire in a freighter at the Graving Dock this morning.

The fire broke out in the Star Opel shortly after 10 a.m. after oil leaked into a hold and ignited.

Esquimalt firemen assisted by firefighters from Dockyard spent about an hour putting out the blaze which gave off a pall of thick, black smoke.

There were no injuries and no estimate of damage was available.

Devastating earthquake slams Iran

TEHRAN (AP) — A devastating earthquake rocked northeastern Iran early today, killing at least 500 persons as it toppled houses and mud huts, rescue workers said.

"Lots of bodies are still being found. It is possible that the number of the dead will exceed 1,000," said Mohammed Ali Shirazi.

Shirazi, son of Ayatollah Ali Shirazi, religious leader in the holy city of Mashhad, said the earthquake affected 14 localities in Iran.

City's jobless rate improving

Victoria's jobless rate in October was 7.7 per cent compared with 8.6 per cent at the same time last year, the Canada Employment Centre said today.

The rate had been 6.5 per cent in September.

In releasing the Victoria figures, the CEC said the local economy continues to be stronger than at the same time in 1978.

For example, the Victoria CEC office handled 2,207 claims for Unemployment Insurance compensation during October, down 19.6 per cent from 2,745 the previous October.

There had been fewer layoffs than usual associated with the ending of the peak tourist season.

However, some of these delayed layoffs have occurred during the past week and will be reflected in the next unemployment report.

Canada Employment Centre officials believe the true Victoria unemployment rate normally is above the B.C. average in winter and below in summer, based upon the number of job-seekers registering at CEC offices.

The Canadian unemployment rate in October was 7.1 per cent and for B.C. it was 7.1 per cent. Both figures are seasonally adjusted.

He struck real gold in the classified ads

Ex-vacuum cleaner salesman looking at fortune in deal for mine

Lew Lunde plans to keep on reading those classified advertisements

By DEREK SIDENIUS

There's a gold mine of information in those columns, the 61-year-old retired vacuum cleaner salesman says.

In Lunde's case, you can take that literally.

Twenty years ago he acquired a gold mine after reading an ad in the business opportunity section of the Times.

Last month he sold the mine and again he has the classified section of a newspaper to thank for it.

He says the sale is expected to net him $1 million.

Lunde, who sold Electrolux vacuum cleaners in Victoria for 20 years before moving to West Vancouver six years ago, is a happy man.

The cause of his glee is the old Tamarac mine on Mount Elise just outside Ymir about 20 miles north of Trail.

Founded in 1897, it was worked only a few years before it was closed in 1905. It re-opened during the 30s then closed again in 1938.

The mine remained idle until 1958 when a prospector named George Powell purchased one of the nine Crown-granted leases on the property from the Widdowson estate for $1,000. He put $150 down and promised to pay the rest within a year.

Powell went to the site with a partner in the summer of 1958. Each was to put up $2,500. Powell did, but the partner didn't.

They scraped away the rubble blocking the portal and then in the fall, when his partner fled to other pastures, Powell headed to Victoria. Crippled with a war wound, he couldn't stand the harsh Kootenay winters.

Lunde, of course, knew nothing of this until that fateful day in January, 1959, when he was scanning the Times and spotted this ad:

"Have high grade gold mine. Like partner to form company."

Lunde and Powell hit it off the moment they met. Both had both been in the air force, both were dreamers and both were boundlessly enthusiastic.

Lunde told him that come what may he'd give him the $850 he needed to pay the balance owing on the lease to Widdowson.

"If you do that, then I'll give you half. We'll be partners," Powell replied.

Lunde agreed to provide financial backing up to $15,000 and the bargain was sealed.

The pair formed a company, Tamarac Mines Ltd. (NPL), and took a geologist to the mine.

Based on his report, an American firm, Pacific Western Metals, bought the property that November. The terms included a $30,000 cash payment plus $300,000 against royalties.

The mining company paid Tamarac $15,000. The rest would be forthcoming when the mine started up.

Pacific Western Metals was gambling on the price of gold rising but the price never rose and three years later the agreement was voided, the property reverting to Tamarac.

With the money they had received, Lunde and Powell bought the remaining eight leases from the Widdowson estate.

In 1969, Powell, his health fading, decided to make one last trip to his native England. He needed $2,500 and offered Lunde his Tamarac shares.

Lunde and the company's lawyer, the late Gerry Lauder of Victoria, bought him out.

Powell returned to Victoria in early 1970 and died a few months later.

With the price of gold starting to rise, Lunde once again was looking for a developer for the mine. But fate intervened. The New Democratic Party sweep to victory in August, 1972, severely restricted mining development in the province.

What had made Tamarac such a sweet property was the fact the leases were Crown-granted. Royalties could not be taxed. But the NDP changed that with the imposition of a super royalties tax.

The plans for Tamarac hung in limbo until the Socreds were returned to power in December, 1975. The following year the tax was removed.

But by then Lunde had been promoted to divisional manager of Electrolux. In October, 1978, he retired and returned home to West Vancouver.

It wasn't long before he found a buyer for his mine. But the development company wouldn't commit itself until May when the outcome of the provincial election would be known. Then the chief shareholder came down with cancer and that sent everything into a tizzy. It looked like the deal would collapse.

Lunde felt he was jinxed.

Each day he scanned the classified ads and in early August he saw one offering an art gallery business in Vancouver. Lunde made an appointment to see the owner, Howard Toban.

During their interview Toban got a telephone call. Lunde overheard Toban talking about a silver mine in Nevada and when Toban had finished the call, he asked him if he was in mining.

Toban replied that he was, that he was president of a mining company, Greenwood Explorations.

"Well I am too," Lunde said. "I got a gold mine."

Lunde had found his buyer.

Three weeks later an agreement was worked out. Greenwood would pay Tamarac a guaranteed $20,000 a year plus stock in the company and $1 million in royalties.

The transfer was formally made on Oct. 29.

Last week Greenwood issued a press release in which it said a consulting engineer, Alex Burton, had examined the property and submitted "a very promising report."

He won't be working it, of course. He intends to enjoy the good life.

Oh, he'll still keep on reading the classifieds.

"But," he adds, "I don't think I'll have to read them quite so often now."

max low

Veteran though youthful campaigner John Hayes remarked while chatting the other day that interest in this Saturday's civic elections seemed to be at an all-time low. There were fewer voters attending all-candidates meetings than he'd ever seen before.

This, observed the man who hopes to be mayor, means either people are satisfied with the way things are being done (which he isn't inclined to accept) or they don't give a damn.

But Ald. Robin Blencoe felt it showed people considered themselves helpless to do anything about matters related to their city.

Either way, it's pretty sad.

Which are you? Do you feel helpless? Do you believe there's nothing you can do because the politicians will go ahead and do what they want, anyway? Or don't you give a damn — about things that affect you?

Energy, for example.

If we're not facing an energy crisis right now, we soon will be. Probably, we think a lot about energy but how much do we, as Canadians, ever do about it? Most of us, very little.

"The trouble is, when politicians talk about energy they're really just talking about oil," Derrick Mallard, president of the Citizens' Association to Save the Environment (CASE) points out. "And there isn't enough thought given to renewable energy resources such as wind and solar."

Much research has been done in Canada into solar and wind energy, says Derrick, but "not enough has been done to transfer it to the nuts and bolts of technology." Something has to be done to get Canadians involved in manufacturing the equipment needed to transfer the heat from the sun and the power of the wind into energy for us.

What CASE proposes we do is set up a huge alternative energy development and demonstration centre.

The proposed centre, which would be near Victoria on a site chosen to best make use of the wind and sun, would utilize a big windmill to pump up sea water and desalinize it through solar stills. That desalinized water would then be used as irrigation in two types of greenhouses — one a normal passive-type greenhouse facing south and the other filled with solar collectors and wide spectrum lighting to extend the greenhouse growing season to 12 months a year.

"We import quite a lot of food from California and Mexico," Derrick points out. "And, as the cost of producing and transporting this food increases, these increases will be passed on to us. We want to show people that these foods can be grown here year-round."

The main building in the centre would be heated and air-conditioned by solar collectors and panels supplimented by heat exchange pumps. Windmill-powered generators combined with solar cells would produce the electricity needed.

As well, the centre would be a hive of energy information where as well as all operating systems being open to the public to view, seminars, trade workshops and other information sessions could be held.

Biggest problem, of course, with building a centre on a prime beside-the-sea spot to have sun, wind and salt water, is money and CASE is applying for help from a special federal-provincial committee set up in May this year with a fund of $27 million to "stimulate demonstration and innovative energy projects."

"We're not asking the government to build the centre for us or to pay for it all, though, as we're preaching self-sufficiency and believe the community needs to contribute to feel and become involved in the project," Derrick explains. "We're asking for $14,000 to start with to complete the detailed engineering study."

As part of the community involvement and as a fund-raising project, CASE member Rhoda Kaellis is organizing a dance at 8 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 24, at Servetus Hall on Superior Street.

"Stimulation of both the public and private firms is what we're aiming for with the centre," Derrick says.

"People tend to be dubious about wind and solar power because they've only seen them working perhaps down in California. But if they can see them and feel them right here on their doorstep, they will be convinced."

Opponents say these kind of things can't be introduced in an urban area because everyone doesn't have room for a windmill or a solar greenhouse.

"But we have to convince builders that where new developments are taking place, they be designed so we can put this equipment in now," says Derrick.

And then, hopefully, from this alternative energy development centre and others like it, will spring companies — Canadian companies — which will engineer, develop and market these wind and solar systems.

If we don't start now, Canadians in the 1990s will find themselves in the ludicrous position of having to import from the Americans equipment with which to exploit Canadian sunshine!

Ask the Times

Q. I recall reading somewhere that newspapers can be rolled into a log and then treated with a liquid mix of some kind to produce a very good log for the fireplace. I wonder if you could locate or give me further information on the procedure and the chemical process? H.D.B.

A. According to the Recycling Education Project, 660 Fort, newspapers should be rolled as tightly as possible to the size of the average conventional fireplace log and tied with wire. Rolled tightly, it will give as much warmth and last as long as a conventional log. Another source recommends that newspapers be left outside for a while and dampened by rain, being prepared after the newspaper is hardened. Some chemicals can be used but these are merely to add color.

Emergency meet set on 'threat' to unions

By MIKE HUGHES

Victoria Labor Council will hold an emergency meeting Thursday to discuss what the building trade unions feel is an impending assault by non-union "right-to-work" construction companies.

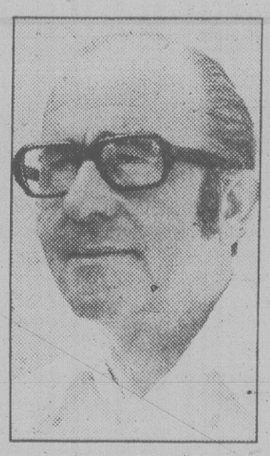
Council secretary Larry Ryan told affiliated unions the meeting has been called "so that the right-to-work threat may be explained in detail and defensive strategy instituted to counter it."

John Schibli, secretary-treasurer of the Vancouver Island Building and Construction Trades Council, said today the building trades are concerned about reports that a high-profile, right-to-work company plans to establish itself in Victoria.

He said Rempel Bros. Concrete Ltd. of Langley is negotiating for property.

Schibli said the company's owners are among the original members of the provincial right-to-work movement.

"We feel that the other unions will be concerned about an incursion into Victoria of that nature."



SCHIBLI
. . . defensive moves

Those adhering to right-to-work tenets feel that no worker should be forced to belong to a union and therefore the so-called "union shop" concept where every employee has to be a union member should be scrapped.

The island building trades council has been conducting a running battle with the non-union firms for more than two years.

The organized unions feel the non-union firms are nibbling away at work which should be theirs and represent a threat to the organized union movement.

So far action against the non-union companies has taken the form of information pickets or picket lines put up for short periods.

Schibli said the purpose of Thursday's meeting is to inform the other unions about the situation and try to come up with new defensive moves.

He said Fraser Valley unions have taken an organized approach to combatting Rempel's activities.

$500,000 surplus predicted for city

The city of Victoria will end the year with a $500,000 surplus, Ald. Murray Glazier said today.

He wants to see the money used to reduce taxes on next year's budget. That amount would cut taxes for 1980 by just under two mills.

The finance committee chairman said Victoria budgeted for $49,120,714 but extra revenue from a number of areas has put the city over the top.

Income on investments and revenue from food concessions at the Crystal Pool and Memorial Arena are both higher than forecast, while the city got a $125,000 water rebate from the Greater Victoria Water District because of the water system's high profit.

The police budget of $4.8 million is also underspent by about $30,000 as of Oct. 31, Glazier said.

The surplus is calculated even after $500,000 has been put aside into a storm drain and sewer special fund.

That money hasn't been spent yet, but is intended to build up a surplus to replace aging drains and sewers.

Glazier said in an interview the budget surplus is a credit to the staff, noting that the public works budget of $12 million "is almost right on."

Zero-based budgeting was introduced into public works two years ago and is working well.

The surplus puts the incoming council in a good position for 1980 to reduce the tax burden, he said.

Glazier also noted that the city's debt position is favorable compared with other municipalities.

Victoria's per capita debt was $157.48 at the end of last year while Saanich's was $275 and Oak Bay's $203.84.

The city owed a total of $9,851,000 — just three per cent of its total assessed value of $314,639,000.

A municipality may borrow up to the total of its assessment.

Dragliner nets 250-pounder

Fishing at the 49-fathom mark off Albert Head they snagged a 250-pound bomb in their net.

Gingerly, but hastily they headed back to port where they called in the Armed Forces bomb squad.

By HILDA BEASTALL

Macaroni and other pasta dishes depend mostly on additional ingredients for nutrition values since macaroni alone contributes more calories per ounce of weight than an equal weight of enriched white bread. The macaroni has somewhat higher protein value, but in listed minerals and the B complex listings, the slice of enriched white bread has more to offer.

However, it is possible to improve the quality of macaroni. Just add the wheat germ and the bran which has been milled out of the flour from which it was made. Both are fortunately still relatively inexpensive to buy. Wheat germ sells at 43 cents for 454 gms bulk weight, and the wheat bran, also 454 gms bulk, is 37 cents; both are to be found on the open shelves of some general fkod centres. By adding some of each to a dish near the end of the cooking period, the macaroni increases its proteins, minerals and vitamins at the cost of a few cents for a family dish. Flavor is important too.

The calories in macaroni give it the satisfying bulk that healthy active people need, and combines with a number of other common foods, many of them also in the low cost bracket.

Perhaps equally important to remember is to add a fresh green vegetable to the meal, either in the form of a green salad or cooked lightly to serve with the macaroni dish.

Cheese, eggs, milk from skim milk powder, are quite commonly used with macaroni. Any two are really sufficient if the bran and wheat germ is added. Since the skim milk powder is a low cost product, choose it to go with either the cheese or the eggs both now in the higher price group.

Macaroni Ring is a good looking dish, satisfying, nutritious and not difficult to make. It could be prepared and baked a day ahead if necessary, kept in refrigerator until a half hour before needed.

Reheat in moderate oven while preparing and cooking the vegetables to serve in and around the Ring when turned out on large platter.

MACARONI RING

500 ml macaroni
3 garlic cloves
3 small eggs or 2 large
250 ml water
200 ml skim milk powder
30 ml wheat germ
25 ml wheat bran
grated cheese, paprika, chopped parsley

Cook macaroni with whole peeled garlic cloves in boiling, lightly salted water until almost tender. Drain off water, to use with milk powder later in recipe.

Beat eggs, add the water, milk powder and bran. Stir into macaroni.

Spoon into a well greased ring mould (or a bowl or other mould if no ring). Sprinkle with cheese, wheat germ, paprika and parsley.

Set the mould into a pan of hot water and bake in moderate heat 180 deg.C for about 45 minutes until set and lightly browned.

Arrange hot cooked swiss chard and sliced beets in centre or at each end of platter. Or choose your own combination of vegetables.

If preferred, make a large bowl of colorful salad ingredients topped plentifully with homemade low-fat yogurt.

Spaghetti Loaf (or Macaroni) makes use of small quantities of cooked vegetables that might have been left from previous meal, or a spoonful or two from frozen packets.

Again we use wheat germ and wheat bran to up grade the pasta and this time add eggs (small size) and cheese for increased proteins since this can be a whole meal without additional vegetables.

SPAGHETTI LOAF

2 cups spaghetti (or macaroni) uncooked
3 garlic cloves, sprig thyme, leaf mint
1 tbsp soft margarine
1 tbsp flour unbleached
¾ cup skim milk (from powder, using water from drained spaghetti)
¼ tsp kelp powder
¼ tsp paprika
½ cup grated cheese
¼ cup wheat germ
¼ cup wheat bran cooked peas, carrots, brussels sprouts, kale, whatever you have 3 small eggs or 2 large

Meanwhile, melt margarine in saucepan, stir in flour. Add milk and cook until thickening, stirring constantly. Add seasonings, cheese, vegetables. Cook 5 minues gently. Remove from heat.

Pour into 9x5x3-inch loaf pan. Set pan into a pan of hot water to bake in moderate oven 350 deg.F for about 45 minutes or until set and lightly brown.

Unmould on heated oval platter. Cut slices with sharp knife. Serves 4.

One more macaroni dish, making use of pieces of bacon, cooked meat or cooked fish, odds and ends. This meal is cooked in a skillet with cover, on top burner.

MACARONI SUPPER IN SKILLET

250 ml macaroni, uncooked
15 ml soft margarine
15 ml bleached flour
2 ml salt
1 ml paprika and curry powder mixed
200 ml skim milk from powder
125 ml frozen green peas
125 ml frozen sweet corn
30 ml wheat germ
25 ml wheat bran
cooked bacon pieces, meat or fish

Cook macaroni in lightly salted water until tender. Drain and keep liquid to make skim milk from powder.

Melt margarine in skillet. Add flour and seasonings, stirring well until smooth. Add skim milk and blend until thickened. Add frozen peas and corn; bring to boil again and simmer with lid on for 7 minutes or until both vegetables are tender.

Now stir in wheat germ, bran and whatever cooked meat or fish available, and the macaroni. Heat but do notboil again.

Serves 4.

One otthese enriched macaroni dishes once a week makes a satisfying and tasty meal at low cost.

Similar receipes can be made up by using 100 ml soy grits with macaroni in the baked dishes in place of wheat germ and wheat bran. Soak grits overnight or for six hours to hasten last minute cooking.

Another alternative is to use brown rice in place of macaroni.

Low cost meals today demand planning and the ability to substitute ingredients for variety. Thus is interest maintained with the chance of keeping food expenses within the budget, yet providing family nutrition in appetizing meals.

Prince Charles seems to be trying to forget he turns 31 today, although the BBC is reminding the world. This morning, as Charles combed his hair over a growing bald spot, millions of Britons reflected on whether or not the world's most eligible Scorpio ought to settle down. Charles has been auditioning possible future queens for a dozen years, a devotion to duty that even his sturdy ancestor, King Henry VIII, would find fatiguing. But so few new names have been added to the list that royal circles believe that duties he has been taking on to ease the burden on his mother and father, Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip, are beginning to cut into the time he used to spend at parties and theatres calling for a companion.

The man said he was astounded that New York City authorities could trace a parking offender so far away — so he decided to pay his ticket. In a letter to Mayor Edward Koch, Elias Bluth of Montevideo, Uruguay, wrote: "Any department of the City of New York that can track down a Uruguayan citizen residing in Uruguay, who visited New York just for a few days, and manages to deliver a summons for a parking violation at his personal address nearly 10,000 miles away, deserves to get paid. Therefore, attached please find my check in the amount of $40."

Menage a trois? Well, three is a magic number for a set of identical triplets who married three brothers in a triple wedding in Tel Aviv. Three times the guests shouted "mazel tov!" as each groom crushed the traditional wine glass under his heel and sealed his vows to the bride. The triangular romance among Eti, Dalia and Batsheva Levi, 19, and the Ezon brothers began two years ago, after Eti stopped dating a fourth brother and found she had more in common with Itzik. The six have since been inseparable But how do the Ezon brothers deal with the problem of look-alike wives? "Who said there are no differences?" the brothers asked, laughing wryly.

Dear Abby:

I'm a 24-year-old woman with an important decision to make. I met a very wealthy man who wants to marry me. He bet me $25,000 to $1 that I would not marry him before Christmas Day, 1979! (That means if I marry him, he has to give me $25,000.)

I fly with a big airline and met him three months ago while flying. He's a perfect gentleman, great company, and knows how to treat a woman. He refuses to tell me how old he is, but he looks about 75.

He says he can give me everything I want but sex, and if I marry him he wouldn't mind if I got myself a boyfriend as long as I was home every day by 6 p.m.

He's been married five times and has three grown children and seven grandchildren. He says all I have to do is sign an agreement stating that if he dies while we're married, I am entitled to only $1 million. His family gets the rest. Also, if he wants out of the marriage, he will pay me $10,000 for every month I've lived with him. But if I want out, I get nothing. In the meantime, he agrees to provide me with a car of my choice, all the clothes I want, and $1,000 a month pocket money.

How does this deal sound to you?

In the Clouds

Dear Clouds:

It sounds like a business deal. I suggest you retain your own lawyer.

Dear Abby:

Many people write to you complaining because they sent a gift 'six months ago,' and never received a thank-you for it.

Why don't these people telephone (or write) to the person they sent it to and ask if the gift was ever received? (If it was, and they neglected to acknowledge it, they deserve to be embarrassed.)

There is always a chance that the gift was not received. I work in the department of the post office where packages are undeliverable because the address a) has 'fallen' off or b) has become smudged and cannot be read or c) is incomplete, wrong or illegible. And, worse yet, there is not return address on the package.

Abby, with the holidays coming up, tell your readers to please include their full names and addresses inside as well as outside of every package.

Roll out the eggs for souffle

kay spicer

Grace your brunch, lunch or supper table with elegant and easy egg dishes. Rolled omelet souffle is wonderful for special occasions. The fluffy texture of the omelet contrasts with a creamy cheese sauce and cheese and ham filling. The Crustless Quiche is simple to make and tastes great.

Complement either dish with a vegetable, cooked tender-crisp and a crisp, tossed salad for a superb, satisfying meal — nutritious, too. Eggs contribute protein, iron, Vitamin A, B vitamins and a number of other essential ingredients to out diet. If you are counting calories, keep in mind that an egg yields only 80 calories.

CRUSTLESS QUICHE
Makes 4 servings

1 tablespoon butter or margarine
1 medium onion, sliced
4 eggs
1 can (1 pound) evaporated milk
½ teaspoon salt
Dash of Worcestershire sauce
¾ cup grated Swiss cheese (3 ounces)

Melt butter in frying pan. Saute onions, stirring occasionally, until limp but not brown. Spread in buttered 9-inch pie plate. Beat together until just blended eggs, evaporated milk, salt and Worcestershire sauce. Pour over onions. Sprinkle cheese on top. Bake in 350°F oven 30 to 40 minutes or until centre is set and top is golden. Cut into wedges to serve.

Variations: add one or more of the following instead of or along with onions: cooked bacon, cooked ham, sliced mushrooms.

Leftover quiche can be heated, uncovered, in 325°F oven for 15 to 20 minutes or until thoroughly warm. Or a slice of quiche can also be reheated in a microwave oven on High in approximately 2 minutes.

OMELET SOUFFLE
Makes 6 servings

Omelet:
3 tablespoons butter or margarine
⅓ cup all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon white pepper
Pinch of nutmeng
1 ½ cups milk
1 ½ cups (6 ounces) shredded Edam, Gouda or mild Cheddar cheese
6 eggs, separated
Cheese and Parsley Sauce:
3 tablespoons butter or margarine
3 tablespoons all-purpose flour
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon dry mustard
2 cups milk
1 cup (4 ounces) shredded Edam, Gouda or mild Cheddar cheese
3 tablespoons chopped parsley
Filling:
1 tablespoon butter or margarine
¼ cup minced onion
1 cup chopped celery
1 cup finely chopped cooked ham
½ cup Cheese and Parsley Sauce
Garnish:
Crisp bacon curls

Grease a 15x10x1 baking pan; line with wax paper; grease paper; dust lightly with flour. Melt butter or margarine in medium saucepan; stir in flour, salt, white pepper and nutmeg. Cook, stirring constantly until bubbly. Stir in milk; cook and stir until sauce thickens and boils 1 minute. Add shredded cheese. Stir quickly until cheese melts. Remove from heat immediately. Let cool while beating eggs. Heat oven to 325°F. Beat egg whites until they form soft peaks. Beat egg yolks in a large bowl; beat in cooled sauce; fold in beaten egg whites. Pour into prepared baking pan. Bake in 325°F oven 45 minutes or until golden-brown and top springs back when lightly touched with finger tips.

Make sauce while omelet bakes. Melt butter or margarine in medium saucepan; stir in flour, salt and mustard. Cook, stirring constantly until bubbly. Stir in milk; continue cooking and stirring until sauce thickens and boils 1 minute; add shredded cheese and parsley; stir until cheese melts. Remove from heat. Set aside. For filling: Saute celery and onion in butter 2-3 minutes. Remove from heat. Stir in ham and ½ cup cheese and parsley sauce.

Remove omelet from pan. (Loosen around edge with blunt side of knife; cover with wax paper and clean tea towel. Turn upside down, quickly, onto counter or large bread board. Lift off pan; peel off wax paper.) Spread ham mixture evenly over omelet. Start at short end and roll-up, jelly-roll fashion, using wax paper and towel to guide omelet as you roll. Lift onto serving platter with two wide spatulas. Heat sauce; spoon half over roll. Garnish with crisp bacon curls. Slice roll; serve with remaining sauce.

In making these egg favorites, it is assuring to know that eggs provide one of the most economical sources of high quality protein you can find. They are a good source of iron, phosphorus, vitamin A, and many other important nutrients.

Eggs are good enough to be listed in Canada's Food Guide as an alternate to meat. And they also provide good value for your dollar. Although sold by the dozen, eggs are graded by weight. One dozen Grade A large weighs at least 1 1/2 pounds. If the cost is 96¢, for example, you are paying 64¢ per pound.

Eggs will lose freshness in just a few hours if kept at a warm temperature, so cool them quickly.

Dedication of scientists unswerving

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

It is a never-ending source of excitement when I read of another bit of newly discovered scientific information. It emphasizes to me the total dedication of scientists and technicians who seek out the answers to the vast and glorious wisdom of the body.

Recently, a special protein was discovered in the semen of men. It seems that this protein can help combat vaginal infections by its capacity to invade and destroy bacteria and fungi.

The substance is called "seminal plasmin." It has the ability to enter bacteria and interfere with their ability to reproduce. Dr. Carl H. Scheit, of the Max Planck Institute in Germany, first isolated this protein.

The ultimate goal of this research is to manufacture the protein artificially. Then, it might be added to antibiotics in order to penetrate and kill those bacteria that today do not respond to antibiotics.

Just this minute addition to scientific knowledge may have taken a research team up to 10 years to complete. It is stark evidence of the dedication of scientists everywhere.

Control of Pain

Pain after surgery can now be controlled with any of a number of narcotic agents. Doctors are constantly seeking to replace these narcotics with other drugs so as to avoid post-operative dependence on narcotics.

Dr. William M. Baird, at the Michigan State University in Lansing, and Dr. Donald R. Mehlisch, of Austin, Texas, are using a new anti-inflammatory drug, "zomepirac," and have found that it is equal to, or even better than, codeine for the control of pain.

In addition, there are fewer adverse side reactions. The drug, not yet officially released or sanctioned by the Food and Drug Administration, is expected to be released soon for general use. It is hoped that this drug and a number of related ones may soon be able to relieve entirely the intensity of all post-operative pain.

New Test For MS

Dr. Kenneth P. Johnson, Professor of Neurology at the University of California in San Francisco, is using a new test for the early diagnosis of multiple sclerosis. The test is based on the analysis of immuno-globulins. It is believed that the test can be performed in most hospital laboratories. In the number of cases that have already been tried it has been found to be almost 90 percent accurate in the early diagnosis of the disease.

These scientists believe that this test may later offer special clues to the causes of this dread disease.

Dr. Coleman welcomes your questions. Mail them to him c/o The Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria, V8W 2N4.

Baked Christmas items can be made in advance and stored frozen for giving

These gifts take dough

By SHARON CADWALLADER
Christian Science Monitor

Quick breads are a terrific addition to holiday planning, because they can be made in advance and stored in the refrigerator or freezer until they are needed.

They make wonderful gifts, and are a perfect addition to a company meal, or as an accompaniment to tea or holiday punches.

A rule of thumb with quick breads is to mix liquid ingredients separately from dry ingredients and then combine only enough to blend the two.

Baking powder and soda begin action immediately, and if you overstir the batter, the leavening gases will escape and the breads will be heavy.

Generally, dried fruits and nuts should be added last in a recipe.

CRANAPPLE BREAD

One-half cup softened butter or margarine
1 cup brown sugar
1 egg, beaten
1 cup whole-wheat pastry flour
1 cup unbleached flour
1 teaspoon soda
One-half teaspoon each cinnamon and salt
One-half cup milk
1 large apple, peeled, cored and coarsely grated
Two-thirds cup chopped fresh cranberries
One-half teaspoon grated lemon rind

Cream together butter and sugar and beat in egg. In separate bowl mix together flour, soda, cinnamon and salt. Quickly add creamed mixture and milk to dry ingredients and stir only enough to moisten.

Stir in apples, cranberries and lemon rind. Spoon into a large, well-greased loaf pan and bake at 350 degrees F. for about an hour or until a toothpick comes out clean. Cool and remove from pan. This is best stored for 24 hours before being eaten. Makes 1 loaf.

LEMON RAISIN BREAD

This is a good tea bread.
One and one-half cups yellow raisins
2 tablespoons each lemon and lemon rind
1 cup boiling water
One-half cup slightly softened butter or margarine
Two-thirds cup brown sugar
1 egg
1 teaspoon vanilla
Two and one-third cups unbleached flour
3 teaspoons baking powder
1 scant teaspoon salt
One-half cup wheat germ
Two-thirds cups finely chopped almonds or walnuts (optional)

Put raisins, lemon rind and juice in a small bowl with boiling water for 10 minutes. Meanwhile, cream together butter or margarine, brown sugar, egg and vanilla.

Mix together flour, baking powder, salt and wheat germ separately and stir into creamed ingredients with lemon and raisin mixture and nuts. Mix only enough to moisten. Turn into 2 medium-size, greased loaf pans and bake in 350 degree F. oven for about 45 minutes or until nicely browned. Cool slightly before removing from pan. Makes 2 loaves.

WALNUT CHEESE

1 cup whole-wheat flour
1 cup unbleached flour
3 teaspoons baking powder
One-half teaspoon salt
One-fourth cup slightly softened butter or margarine
One and one-third cup shredded Swiss cheese
One-half cup walnuts
1 egg
One-half cup honey
1 cup milk

In a large bowl mix together flour, baking powder and salt. Cut in butter or margarine to make a coarse meal. Stir in nuts and cheese and then add egg that has been beaten with honey and milk. Stir only enough to moisten and spoon into greased loaf pan.

Let stand for 15 minutes, then bake in preheated 400 degree F. oven for 35 to 40 minutes or until golden brown. Cool slightly before removing from pan. Makes 1 loaf.

PUMPKIN PECAN

This bread is nice as a breakfast bread, or with hot cider in the evening.
1 cup brown sugar
One-half cup oil
One and two-thirds cups cooked or canned pumpkin
2 eggs
1 cup whole-wheat four
One and one-half cups unbleached flour
3 teaspoons baking powder
1 scant teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon cinnamon
One-half teaspoon each ginger and cloves
1 cup chopped pecans

Beat together sugar, oil, pumpkin and eggs. In a separate bowl mix together flours, baking powder, salt and spices. Combine pumpkin mixture with dry ingredients only enough to moisten all ingredients. Stir in nuts and spoon into 2 lightly greased loaf pans and bake in 350 degree F. oven for 1 hour or until toothpick comes out clean. Cool slightly and remove from pan. Makes 2 loaves.

Teensy crabs mostly flavor

I was a bit surprised a short while ago when someone inquired as to whether the tiny sand crabs you find on many beaches are edible. Two recipes (untried, it must be confessed) were offered, more as a matter of novelty and record than anything else.

The column elicited several letters including one from Samuel Abramson of Manhattan.

"I recall," he wrote, "eating them several times in Spain in 1938, in Cambrils, a fishing town on the coast, south of Tarragona. I had never seen them eaten before or since.

"When I was first served these tiny crabs on a bed of rice, the friendly fisherman explained to me that these were 'los cangrejos que andan atras,' (crabs that walked backward). They were valued primarily for the flavor they imparted to the rice, as there was nothing to eat in them.

"Those were hungry days in Spain and those rice dishes were gourmet feasts. I recall that they were accompanied by fried smelts caught during the night. Thanks for the memories."

In an article that dealt with no-salt cookery, one recipe was included for a Chinese dish made with shredded chicken and bean sprouts. The recipe was taken from a Chinese cookbook written by Virginia Lee and myself. The recipe, salt excluded, was lifted directly from that book. Inadvertently, I failed to eliminate the optional ingredient monosodium glutamate. Of course, you should not use monosodium glutamate in a no-sodium diet. I was resoundly chided by my friend and doctor, Joseph Rechtschaffen. And a few score readers.

We recently pointed out that the name graham cracker derived from a nutritionist named Sylvester Graham, who lived from 1794 to 1851. He developed a finely ground whole wheat flour, from which the crackers are made.

Eleanor Lowenstein of the Corner Book Shop in Manhattan sent along a small book written by Graham. The title is Treatise on Bread and Bread-Making and it was published in 1837. The copy delivered to this desk is a facsimile edition.

And one final bit in today's potpourri — Brussels Sprout Soup.

This is an ideal soup for a cold evening. The fresh sour sour cream is a must to bring out the delicate flavor of the Brussels sprouts. Be sure to pass the pepper mill.

Wash and trim: 1 pound of young Brussels sprouts. Cut crosswise incision 1-2 inch deep in bottom of sprouts and saute them for 5 minutes in 2 tablespoons butter.

Add 3 cups lamb or beef stock (heated), 3 to 4 small potatoes (approximately 3-4 pound), cut in 1-2 inch dice, lightly sprinkled with salt and pepper.

Bring to a boil, lower heat, cover and simmer 20 minutes. Adjust seasonings with salt and pepper and garnish with minced fresh parsley or dill dollops of sour cream.

This comes from The Art of Cooking for Two Coralie Castle and Astrid Newton

Lobster with extra bite

the 60-minute gourmet

One of the greatest advances in taste during the past decade has been the adoption of European or European-style mustards. There is, of course, nothing wrong with the standard "ball park" mustard. It is excellent on hot dogs and cold meat sandwiches, but it doesn't work as well when it is used in the preparation of sauces. The reason, I suspect, is the predominant flavor of turmeric, which gives the mustard its rich yellow hue.

It also seems to me that more and more French chefs are using mustard in food preparation. One of the best new dishes that I have sampled in recent years was a quick saute of veal chops with imported mustard and mustard seeds, the creation of Jean Troisgros when he visited my kitchen a summer or so ago.

Mustard has, of course, been a basic ingredient for all deviled dishes or dishes a la diable, be they made with meat, poultry or shellfish.

One of the best and most easily and quickly made dishes of my own experience is a platter of swordfish, smeared lightly with mustard before broiling. Swordfish is, to my taste, one of the best fish in North American or European waters and comes closest, I think, to resembling an incredibly delicate meat. For this dish, it is only necessary to brush swordfish steaks previously sprinkled with salt and pepper with a little mustard and melted butter. When placed under the broiler for 15 minutes, the results are admirable.

The cooking time is so brief, in fact, that it would be best to start preparing the side dish — in this case a simple but excellent combination of carrots and turnips — before the main item.

BROILED SWORDFISH WITH MUSTARD

1 swordfish steak, about 1¼ pounds and about 1 inch thick.

Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste.

2 tablepoons butter.

2 teaspoons prepared mustard.

1 teaspoon mustard seeds.

Melted butter, optional.

1. Preheat the broiler to high.

2. Sprinkle the swordfish with salt and pepper.

3. Heat the butter in a baking dish large enough to hold the swordfish steak. Brush the steak on both sides with mustard and sprinkle with mustard seeds.

4. Place the steak in the dish and place in the oven about four or five inches from the source of heat. Broil about three or four minutes.

5. Turn the fish and broil on the second side about four or five minutes. Do not overcook. Serve with lemon wedges and, if desired, melted butter poured over.

Yield: 2 to 4 servings.

CARROTS AND TURNIPS

1¾ cups carrots cut into very thin rounds.

2 tablespoons butter.

Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste.

2 cups white turnips cut into half-inch cubes..

1. Combine the carrots, half the butter, water, salt and pepper in a shallow skillet. Cover closely and bring to the boil.

2. Add the turnips and cook about five minutes or slightly longer until turnips are crisp tender. Do not overcook. Stir in the remaining butter and add salt to taste.

Yield: 4 servings.

Monks frightened out of secrets

By PATRICIA WELLS
New York Times

Savina Roggero brushed aside her wavy red hair, gave the soup pot another stir, and began talking about her first visit to an Italian monastery, which was a year ago.

"I had just come from covering a fashion show in Florence for La Stampa," the Italian journalist said. "I was thinking of doing a cookbook on Italian monastery cooking and so dropped in on one near Florence.

"My hair was redder then. Carrot red. I had on a fur coat, lots of makeup. And I was alone. I should have known better," she said, toying with the multitude of rings on her fingers.

"I knocked on the door of the monastery," she went on. "A monk opened the door slightly, took one look at the fiery red hair, the makeup and the fur and fled."

Fortunately, she later exchanged the fur for a cotton dress and persuaded her husband to accompany her on her monastery visits. Within a six-month period she had gained access to the kitchens and libraries of more than 30 Italian monasteries to research her recently published I Segreti dei Frati Cucinieri, ("Secrets of the Cooking Monks"), Oscar Mondadori Publishers.

Roggero

Cipolle Ripiene alla Piemontese (Stuffed onions)

This is one of the many antipasti from the Piedmont region. In the monasteries, however, it would be served as a main course, since it contains both vegetables and meat. Any leftover chicken or meat may be used.

- 3 large red onions.
- 1 chicken breast.
- 2 cups chicken stock or water.
- 2 tablespoons butter.
- 2 tablespoons olive oil.
- 2 cloves garlic, finely minced.
- 1 carrot, finely chopped.
- 1 stalk celery, finely chopped.
- 3 tablespoons fresh rosemary or 1 tablespoon dried.
- ½ cup finely grated bread crumbs.
- ½ cup grated Parmesan cheese.
- 2 eggs, slightly beaten.
- ¼ cup almonds, finely chopped (optional).
- ¼ cup walnuts, finely chopped (optional).
- 3 tablespoons fresh parsley, finely minced.
- Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste.

1. Peel the onions but do not cut off the ends. Place in a pan of boiling salted water and cook for about 30 minutes. Remove from water, cut in half horizontally, and spoon out the centre of each onion, leaving enough of the onion intact so the vegetable will stand on its own. Chop the onion centers and reserve.

2. Meanwhile, poach the chicken breast in the stock. Remove from stock, and chop the breast meat finely and set aside. Reserve the stock.

3. Preheat oven to 350 degrees.

4. Combine the butter and oil in a saute pan, add the garlic and saute over medium heat until lightly browned. Add the chopped carrot, celery, and rosemary and cook for a few minutes. Add the chopped chicken breast and cook another five minutes.

5. Remove from the heat and add half the bread crumbs, half the cheese, the eggs, nuts and parsley. Season with salt and pepper.

6. Fill the onions with the mixture, sprinkle lightly with the remaining bread crumbs and cheese, and place in a baking pan. Pour the reserved broth into the pan.

7. Bake for 30 to 40 minutes. Serve warm or at room temperature.

Yield: 3 servings as a main course, 6 as an antipasto.

Uova Filanti (Eggs filanti)

From the Campania region, this is a simple and inexpensive dish to prepare, and a very popular main dish on the monk's table. It would be excellent for a brunch or a quick Sunday night supper.

- 2 tablespoons butter.
- ¼ cup bread crumbs.
- 1 pound mozzarella cheese.
- 8 eggs.
- ¼ cup freshly grated Parmesan cheese.
- Freshly ground pepper to taste.

Preheat oven to 450 degrees.

2 Butter a deep pie or quiche pan and sprinkle with bread crumbs. Cube the mozzarella and evenly cover the bottom of the pan. Break the eggs over the cheese in a single layer. Completely cover the eggs with the remaining mozzarella, sprinkle with Parmesan and pepper and bake for 15 minutes, or just until the yolks have set. Serve immediately.

Yield: 6 to 8 servings.

This is one of the few all-meat dishes discovered on the monastary tour. For authentic flavor, fresh, not dried rosemary should be used. In the monastaries, the dish would be accompanied with potatoes baked in the oven with plenty of oil, garlic and hot red peppers.

- 4 cloves garlic.
- 1 cup olive oil.
- 3½ pounds cubed lamb.
- Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste.
- 6 tablespoons fresh rosemary or 2 tablespoons dry.
- 1½ cups dry white wine.

In a Dutch oven saute the garlic in half the olive oil. Add the lamb, season with salt and papper. Sprinkle with the rosemary. Add remaining oil and the wine. Cover and seal the Dutch oven with a strip of cloth that has been soaked in a paste made of equal portions of flour and water. Place over a low flame and cook for one hour, or bake in the oven for about the same length of time. Then remove the cover, stir and serve immediately.

Yield: 6 to 8 servings.

Baby food can keep you going questions & answers

Q: On a recent visit to an old aunt who lives alone, I discovered that her diet consisted largely of baby food. Can baby food provide adequate nutrition for an adult over a long period of time?

A: Yes. A reasonably nutritious though not terribly appealing diet can be provided by baby food if the proper foods are selected and eaten in adequate amounts.

For example, a lunch consisting of a jar of junior meat, a jar of junior vegetables and a jar of fruit for desert, served with a slice of bread and butter or margarine and a glass of milk, would provide more than a third of the day's nutritional requirements.

If, however, lunch is a vegetable-and-meat combination, with some fruit and a cup of tea, the diet will be lacking in several nutrients, including protein, as well as in calories.

Nutritional adequacy is important. However, one must be concerned about the reason your aunt has chosen to eat baby food. Is it poor-fitting dentures? A lack of interest in eating? Is it that she just doesn't feel like cooking for one person? Does she have some digestive distress that needs to be evaluated by a doctor? Surely it can't be because baby food provides a tremendous taste thrill.

Many elderly people resort to baby food or a diet of milk and crackers simply because they've lost interest in the whole business of cooking and eating. If you find there's no real problem other than boredom, you may be able to find help in your community. One alternative for your aunt might be eating some of her meals with other people of her generation. Some senior-citizen agencies offer low-cost, nutritious lunches or dinners.

Q: A neighbor has advised me that it is important to take potassium supplements while on a weight-reducing diet. Is this a good idea?

A: The idea that potassium supplements are necessary became a vogue when liquid protein diets were at the height of their recent popularity. Specifically, questions were raised about the possibility that potassium deficiency might have been a factor in causing the deaths of some individuals on the diet.

Potassium does, of course, play an essential role in many body functions. Together with sodium it maintains both the fluid environment of healthy cells and the acid-alkaline balance in the body. It activates certain enzymes. And it is necessary for proper muscle contraction, particularly in the heart.

Deficiencies can occur, and can be serious. In the extreme, death can result when insufficient potassium is available for normal contractions of the heart muscles. Most commonly, deficiency develops as a result of the combined effects of poor diet and excessive potassium losses from diarrhea or the taking of diuretic drugs.

Fast foods now a diet mainstay

By BETH ROSENTHAL
Los Angeles Times

Ah, you've been so good all week. No junk foods, no snacks. Milk with breakfast and lunch, dinner replete with lentils and liver and spinach and salad. But admit it. As you ate your dry whole wheat toast you lusted after a Big Mac surrounded by a mountain of French fries or better yet, a pizza with everything!

So you raised the collar on your trenchcoat, cast a furtive glance about and surreptitiously slunk down to the nearest Wendy's for a fast food orgy.

Now you're feeling deliciously full, but alas, terribly guilty. But there's really no need. Consumer Reports magazine, that painstaking publication which carefully rates all items purchasable, analyzed the offerings at 11 of the nation's most prevalent fast food chains. The report in last September's issue, concluded, "Some people think fast food meals are only a cut above junk food. But there's more than empty calories in the fast foods we tasted. We have paid more and waited longer for a lot less (nutritionally)."

Fast foods are becoming a mainstay of the North American diet. A recent Gallup poll revealed 33 per cent of adults eat out every day; 28 per cent of them feast at a fast food outlet. Lunch is prime time, but as the magazine reports, "fast food chains have breakfast, dinner and snack appeal, too."

And "all roads lead to fast foods." In 1970 the hungry could pull up to only 30,000 outlets across the country. Today the cash and carry restaurants have mushroomed to an estimated 140,000.

Consumer Reports suggests convenience is a powerful lure. "A full meal is only a pit-stop away." And the fare is affordable. Last year the average price of a fast food meal was $2.85. But the average tab at a barely higher class establishment totalled $6.92.

Whose entrees are the most nutritious? Dieticians analyzed each entry down to its last vitamin B 12. As its standard the magazine adopted the Recommended Daily Allowance (RDA) for an adult woman as set by the National Academy of Sciences. A hospital nutritionist helped us analyze the maze of figures.

The Burger King Whopper, McDonald's Big Mac, Wendy's Old Fashioned and Jack-in-the-Box Jumbo Jack were essentially equivalent in nutrition when adjusted for serving size. All were very high in protein, supplying more than 50 percent of the RDA. They also yielded almost one half of the RDA for most of the vitamins and minerals. Wendy's did all that with fewer calories (413) than the others.

Americans eat too much fat. Fat content in the burgers was high, accounting for most of the calories. But surprisingly, most of the fats were polyunsaturated, which is good.

But the burgers are almost dangerous when it comes to salt. All four contestants measured at least one gram of sodium per burger when adjusted for size. A moderate salt restricted diet allows only four grams of sodium per day and a low sodium diet requires ingesting only one gram daily. If you're concerned eat Wendy's It scored the lowest sodium count.

The roast beef sandwiches that came under Consumer Reports scrutiny included Roy Rogers, Arby's, Hardee's and Burger King. Burger King came out on top as the most nutritious, but it was also larger than its competitors. Overall the sandwiches contained less vitamins than the hamburgers but slightly more protein.

The fish entrees, popularly viewed as a healthy alternative to a beefy menu, actually turned in a more miserable performance. Ounce for ounce the fast food gourmet gets more protein and more vitamins when gorging on hamburgers or roast beef than he does chowing down on a fish sandwich. The fast food version are high in sugars and fats. If you must, even when adjusted for portion size Long John Silver's contained more protein and less starch than Arthur Treacher's Original, McDonald's Filet-O-Fish and the burger King Whaler, although it did contain almost 50 percent more salt.

The chicken entrants — Kentucky Friend Chicken and Arthur Treacher's Original — yielded another surprising fact. The chicken was less salty than its meaty competitors and contained the same number of calories. While Arthur Treacher's was on a par with the Colonel's when it came to calories, it measured more fat, more carbohydrates and less protein.

Pizza Hut pizza turned out to be the most nutritious food tested. One serving — half of a 15 1-2 ounce pizza — contained almost one-half the RDA for most of the vitamins and minerals. It was the only item that contained respectable amounts of vitamin A. Alas, it too was very high in sodium.

Low food on the totem pole was Jack-in-the-Box Tacos. Instead of nutrition they offered lots of calories, fat and salt, according to the study.

So here's the bottom line, according to Consumer Reports. "Although fast foods are high in calories, fat and sodium, they're not entirely off limits. They are acceptable nutritionally when consumed judiciously, infrequently and as part of a well-balanced diet."

So if you stuck to your lentils and liver all week, you deserve a break today.

Use This Home Recipe Plan to Lose Ugly Fat

It's simple how quickly one may lose pounds of bulky unsightly fat right in your own home. Use this recipe plan yourself. It's easy - no trouble at all and costs little. Just go to your drug store and ask for four ounces of Naran. Pour this into a pint bottle and add enough grapefruit juice to fill the bottle. Take two tablespoons full twice a day and follow the Naran plan.

If your first purchase does not show you the simple, easy way to lose bulky fat and help regain slender more graceful curves; if reducible pounds and inches of excess fat don't seem to disappear almost like magic from neck, chin, arms, bust, abdomen, hips, calves and ankles just return the empty bottle for your money back. Follow the easy way endorsed by many who have tried this plan and help bring back alluring curves and graceful slenderness. Note how quickly bloat disappears how much better you feel. More alive, youthful appearing and active.

A taco to make the pros blush

By MIKE MCGRADY

Okay, it's your turn to cook dinner but . . . nothing seems right. They happen to the best of cooks, those evenings when you draw a blank. And time is running out. What to do? Well, why not just start cooking now and ask questions later?

Fine, but cook what? You might consider the basic, all-purpose starter meal. Slice some onions into a frying pan. Add a chopped pepper. Some minced garlic. Some salt and pepper, some chopped tomatoes, some ground meat. At this point, your background takes over. If you happen to be Italian, you'll reach for the oregano and the spaghetti. Indian — and you'll want some curry and rice. Hungarians will go for noodles and paprika.

But on this particular night, the accent is Mexican. Tonight you'll reply on the South-of-the-Border spices and make tacos that will be the envy of fast-food stands everywhere.

The Staples: Make sure these are all on hand: garlic, oregano, chili powder, cumin, coriander, Tabasco, salt, pepper, butter.

The Shopping List: One pound ground beef; one large onion; three large tomatoes, one package tortillas (frozen or dried); two green chili peppers (carefully seeded); half pound cheddar cheese; a head iceberg lettuce; one small can tomato sauce; two ripe avocados; one melon; one lemon; one lime; beer.

Any taco recipe quickly becomes the original creation of the person doing the cooking. It's one of those meals that you bend to your own taste almost immediately. So what follows should not be considered a recipe so much as a starting point.

5:30 P.M.: And the way you start the taco sauce is much the way you start a spaghetti sauce. Begin by frying the ground beef in a large frying pan over medium heat. When the meat is browned, drain away the fat and set the beef to one side.

Melt a chunk of butter in the frying pan and add half the onion, chopped fine. And two cloves of garlic, minced. And the seeded green chili peppers, minced. Simmer this over a medium heat for 10 minutes and then add the tomato sauce. Add a pinch of oregano, a pinch of cumin and another of coriander.

And now the chili powder. How much chili powder? Well, before making a decision of this magnitude, you must ask yourself this question: How much cold beer do you have on hand?

Try two tablespoons of chili powder, more if you like things hot. Finally, add the cooked meat. Keep the mixture warm over very low heat until you serve it.

5:50 P.M.: Grate the cheddar cheese and chop half a head of lettuce and set this aside.

Cook the tortillas, following the directions on the package. Tortillas can be purchased in a dried or frozen form. Whichever you choose, you'll wind up with a corn pancake that forms a pocket for the taco filling.

6 P.M.: Guacamole is traditionally served as an appetizer, a dip that is generally accompanied by crackers. Tonight, however, it will be your salad. Make the guacamole as close to dinner time as possible as it has an unfortunate tendency to turn brownish.

Rub the inside of a small bowl with a peeled clove of garlic and then throw it away. (The garlic, not the bowl.) Peel the ripe avocados and mash them with a fork. Add the juice of half a lemon, the rest of the chopped onion, a few dashes of Tabasco sauce, freshly ground pepper, salt and one medium-sized tomato, chopped fine.

6:30 P.M.: When a meal is this simple to put together, appearance counts. Serve the chilled beer in a proper glass. Scoop the guacamole onto a nice bed of lettuce. Serve the melon slices with a wedge of lime.

The tacos themselves will have to be individual creations. The meat mixture is spooned inside the folded tortilla and is then topped by a handful of chopped lettuce and grated cheese.

Metric chicken varies little in appearance from old variety during evisceration

Metric chicken new taste treat

Carmen Moreau-Vena, food consultant with Agriculture Canada, says that a whole chicken weighing about 1.4 kilograms (about three pounds) should be enough for six servings, based on a serving of 90 grams.

If you're planning on serving chicken breasts, one that weighs about 390g will provide two servings, after weight loss in cooking is considered. A thigh per serving is about 210g and a whole leg about 220g.

You'll need two drumsticks (or 230g) per serving or two wings (340g).

Ms. Moreau-Vena says that when buying chicken parts, edible yield (cooked meat) can vary from about 27 to 46 per cent, depending on what type of meat is bought.

A whole chicken roasted at 160 Celsius (325 fahrenheit) to an internal temperature of 85 Celsius (185 fahrenheit) and cooled for 10 minutes provides about 38 per cent edible meat; drumstick, 39 per cent; a whole leg 41 per cent and a thigh 43 per cent.

Where does the rest of the weight go? In breasts, for example, 45.7 per cent is edible meat. About 29 per cent is lost in cooking, another 14 per cent is bone, 7.6 per cent is skin and 3.7 per cent is drip loss.

Stifado for a sixsome

This makes five or six servings.

3 pounds top round of beef, cut into 1 1/2 inch cubes
Salt and freshly ground black pepper
3 cloves garlic, peeled and chopped
1 bay leaf, crumbled
2-inch stick cinnamon
3 tablespoons
1/2 cup red wine
24 small white onions, peeled
1 cup tomato sauce
1/2 teaspoon sugar
1 cup crumbled feta cheese

Preheat oven to 325 degrees. In a 4-quart casserole combine the meat, salt, pepper, garlic, bay leaf and cinnamon. Cover tightly and cook over low heat 10 minutes. Add the wine vinegar and the wine. Cover tightly and place in oven to bake 1 1/2 hours.

Add the tomato sauce, sugar and the onions to the casserole. Return to the oven to bake 1 hour longer.

English pork pie a classic export

By MARC MILLON
Christian Science Monitor

MELTON MOWBRAY, ENGLAND — To Englishmen, the very name of Melton Mowbray brings to mind a mouth-watering image of savoury meat pies, stuffed with seasoned pork and jelly, and encased in a nut brown, crumbly crust which is raised without tin, hoop or band.

In this small market town in the heart of rolling Leicestershire, where the English pork pie was created in 1830, one still can see them being made in the traditional manner.

At Dickinson & Morris, the oldest remaining pork pie bakery in Melton Mowbray, where pies have been baked continuously since 1850, it still is possible to see the famous crusts being "hand raised" on a wooden block. And here you can custom-order them to suit any appetite--from individual bite-size pieces to mammoth ones, large enough to satisfy the voracious needs of a rugby team.

In the mid-19th century, Melton Mowbray was the fashionable capital of the fox hunt, and it is probably that the popularity of these savory pies grew partly because local riders found them easy to carry about the countryside, and delicious to eat when cold.

Another reason for the meteoric rise in the pork pie industry in the 19th century was the abundance in Melton Mowbray of whey, a byproduct of cheesemaking. Pigs thrive on whey, and consequently, there was a good supply of pork in the area.

A Melton Mowbray pie is filled with seasoned pork, and the bones and pork rind are simmered with herbs to produce a gravy, which, when cold, seals the pie in a firm, savory jelly.

Here is an authentic recipe for Melton Mowbray pork pie which I found in the Melton Carnegie Museum, in Melton Mowbray.

MELTON MOWBRAY PORK PIE

1 pound lean pork
Powdered herbs, parsley, sage, thyme
One-fourth pint stock
Salt and pepper
1 onion finely chopped
8-ounce hand-raised crust pastry (see below)

Cut meat into small cubes and season to taste with herbs, salt and pepper. Place any leftover bones and rind, finely chopped onion, salt and pepper and herbs into a saucepan with water or stock and simmer for 2 hours, so that the gravy when cold will form a firm jelly.

Mould the pastry with the hands (see below). Put in the filling, and cover with a pastry lid. Make a ventilation hole in the lid. After the pie is baked, pour in the liquid jellied stock through this hole, and allow to set.

Three or four folds of greaseproof paper should be fastened round the pie to preserve its shape and prevent it from becoming too brown.

Brush the top of the pie with egg or milk. Bake in a hot oven, 425 degrees F. at first, and reduce heat as soon as pastry is set. Bake for about 90 minutes.
Last 30 minutes, remove grease-proof paper and brush sides with egg or milk.

RAISED CRUST PASTRY

10 ounces plain flour
One-half teaspoon salt
3 ounces lard
One-fourth pint milk or water.

Sift flour and salt into a warm bowl and make a well in the center. Keep in a warm place. Heat lard and milk together gently, until boiling, then add to flour, mixing well with a wooden spoon, until cool enough to knead with the hands.

The pastry must be raised or molded while still warm. Reserve one-fourth for the lid and leave in a bowl in a warm place covered with a cloth. Roll out remaining pastry to about one-fourth inch thick in a round or oval shape.

Gently mold the pie with the hands. If this proves too difficult, mold it over a greased and floured jam jar. Take care not to stretch the pastry and be sure that the sides and base are of an equal thickness. Leave to cool.

Trudeau puts off B.C. Grits

RICHMOND (CP) — Opposition Leader Pierre Trudeau passed up what may have been an opportunity to revive the demoralized British Columbia Liberal Party when he cancelled an appearance here in favor of a meeting with U.S. President Jimmy Carter — an encounter which never happened.

His failure to appear last weekend at a policy convention at which leadership was a behind-the-scenes issue, left many party members disappointed, if not angry.

Provincial president Shirley McLoughlin said Tuesday that two weeks before the convention Trudeau's office called to say Carter had requested a meeting with the opposition leader during the U.S. president's planned visit to Ottawa.

The meeting would have made it almost impossible for Trudeau to catch a plane in time to attend the convention in this municipality south of Vancouver, so former cabinet minister Jean-Luc Pepin was recruited as a stand-in.

When Carter's visit was cancelled because of the hostage-taking incident at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran, several B.C. senators and members of parliament said they expected Trudeau to show up at the convention after all.

Those hopes were dashed when Ms. McLoughlin told delegates at the opening session that Trudeau had come down with a dreadful cold. But later in the weekend he was photographed disco-dancing in New York.

Angry that Trudeau hadn't appeared to make any effort to attend the meeting, some delegates who blamed him for provincial and federal election losses demanded the agenda be changed to include a leadership discussion.

They claimed Trudeau's "arrogance and inability to communicate with the West" was largely responsible for the results of the May 22 federal election which saw the party go down to defeat after 16 years in power. Only one Liberal, Art Phillips (Vancouver Centre), was elected west of Manitoba.

Some delegates also said anti-Trudeau sentiment was responsible for the shutting out of the Liberals in the B.C. election of May 10.

But Ms. McLoughlin said the demand to debate the leadership issue was a "kafuffle" on the part of about 10 of the 300 delegates who "just wanted to sound off."

She said by far the majority of the B.C. Liberal party supports Trudeau as leader.

"The only problem they have is that the voters out here, the people you meet when you knock on doors, the non-party members, have been rejecting Trudeau as leader."

Phillips said he backed Trudeau and thought "the Liberal party doesn't believe in stabbing party members in the back." MP Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry) said he got elected by standing up for what Trudeau believes in.

Another party member said the problem was not Trudeau but party insecurity.

New trustees to run VGH

Health Minister Bob McClelland will turn over control of Vancouver General Hospital to an appointed board of trustees Thursday.

McClelland took personal control of the hospital a year ago so that what he called the full resources of his ministry would be available to a new advisory board he appointed as the first step in restoring a community-based management team to the hospital.

The government dismissed the board of trustees and took over operation of the hospital in August, 1978. It had been plagued for months with the resignation of senior nursing staff over what they said was inadequate patient care and a lack of faith in hospital president Larry Truitt.

Coal fire banked

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — The recent announcement about a projected coal production project in the nearby Bowron area was premature, a city mines ministry official said Tuesday.

Mines inspector Dan Tidsbury said his office has heard nothing officially a Resouthe mine proposal, which was disclosed Oct. 31 when Norco Resources Ltd. announced a tentative $1 billion coal deal with Taiwan.

Arson suspected

RICHMOND (CP) — Fire officials suspect arson in a fire which claimed the lives of three members of a Fijian family early Tuesday in this Vancouver suburb.

Two of the victims have been identified as Kamala Krishna, 30, who was pregnant, and her six-year-old daughter Nanliny. A 31-year-old man, not yet identified, also died in the blaze which fire department spokesmen say began under the porch of a three-storey house shared by two families.

Meanwhile, RCMP in Port Moody, a suburb east of Vancouver, say they suspect arson in another fire at the home of a Fijian family and are linking the blaze with the one in Richmond.

Parents to pay

SURREY (CP) — The parents of three boys who spread paint and mustard throughout an elementary school in this municipality south of Vancouver will be asked to pay a $3,000 clean-up bill, the school board decided Tuesday.

The boys, two aged 11 and one 10, were caught by police on the weekend after they sprayed paint on chalk boards and students' lockers, applied plastic cement to carpeting and student's clothing, and pasted the staffroom walls, furniture and lights with the contents of a two-gallon widemouth jar of mustard.

Mountie cleared

KELOWNA (CP) — A RCMP officer, involved in the shooting of an 18-year-old man after a short car chase early Sunday, has been cleared of any wrongdoing following an internal investigation.

The unidentified man was in satisfactory condition in hospital with a shoulder wound.

Staff-Sgt. Art Scully said Tuesday that the officer, who was not identified, was attempting to arrest two male suspects after the chase. The officer's gun discharged accidentally during a scuffle with one man who had attempted to flee.

Some Thoughts on Economic Development

However attractive it may be for some politicians to exploit such an idea, economic development and heritage preservation are mutually exclusive.

What Victoria needs is a clearly defined policy which will dispel suspicion that the cost of economic development is the destruction of Victoria's heritage.

GENTRY HUDSON has a Heritage Development policy which will enable Victoria to have its Heritage Cake and eat it too.

On November 17th put Victoria's Construction Industry to work preserving Victoria's Heritage, by voting for Gentry Hudson.

CP Air offers terminal in Pat Bay flights bid

CP Air is willing to expand Pat Bay airport terminal facilities to back up its request for rights to fly the Victoria-Vancouver route, president Ian Gray said here Tuesday.

He said Ottawa has indicated it will permit private enterprise to get involved in construction of terminals and CP Air is interested.

The Pat Bay airport would be an ideal site for the venture because it appears a $4 million expansion plan there has been stalled because of government austerity measures.

CP Air would be willing to carry out the construction and recapture the money through leasing arrangements with other carriers (Air Canada and Pacific Western Airlines) and by writing off depreciation against taxes.

Gray made the comments after a private meeting with civic leaders.

He said local politicians were generally favorable, although there were some strong comments about the lack of late-night service from Vancouver to the capital city.

Gray said CP Air would be willing to consider late service from Vancouver if granted the rights to fly the route.

His proposal, which will go to the air transport committee for consideration, is to operate one-plane service from Victoria to Vancouver to Winnipeg. From Winnipeg the plane could go to Ottawa or Toronto.

CP Air already has a direct flight from Vancouver to Ottawa.

The company would like to operate two flights per day out of Victoria to start, going to three flights within a year.

Hearings are expected early in the new year and the service could be in place by summer if approval is given.

There were problems about terminal facilities, he conceded. The company might begin by installing some type of portable building until permanent facilities were available if the MOT gives approval.

The company is definitely interested in getting involved in airport construction.

The CP Air flights would be by 115-passenger Boeing 737s, selected because of passenger size and because the noise levels are judged to be acceptable, he said.

Some charter flights in DC-8s would also be considered but only in suitable hours because of the noise factor.

The company proposal is for a morning flight leaving Victoria for Vancouver and then heading to Calgary, Winnipeg, Toronto and Ottawa, he said. An afternoon flight would leave Victoria for Vancouver and then go to Winnipeg, Toronto and Ottawa.

Return flights would be an early morning flight from Ottawa to Toronto to Winnipeg and Victoria and then a late-afternoon flight from Ottawa to Winnipeg to Calgary, to Vancouver to Victoria, arriving some time between 9:30 p.m. and 10 p.m.

This flight could be scheduled a bit later to give Victorians late-night service out of Vancouver, Gray said.

Approval of the proposals would add between eight and 12 jobs to the Victoria-area economy.

CP Air has eight employees in its downtown office. This would have to be increased to 10 and eight others would be employed at Pat Bay.

West Coast Air and Airwest both have applications before the air transport committee for the same route.

Islands Trust chief skeptical of Mair's pledge on Gambier

Environment Minister Rafe Mair's assurance he will recommend an investigation into a proposed copper mine on Gambier Island is not good enough for Islands Trust chairman John Rich.

"It will only satisfy us if they investigate it and come to the conclusion the mine ought not to go ahead," Rich said following his meeting with Mair Tuesday.

Mair intended to take his recommendation for an investigation to the Environment and Land-Use Committee of cabinet today.

"What I want to do," he said, "is consult with my colleagues on ELUC as to whether we should investigate the entire situation, not only of the Islands Trust but even a broader base than that — the question of Howe Sound," said Mair.

The possibility of Dome Petroleum building a liquefied natural gas port on the shores of Howe Sound, north of Vancouver, has agitated environmentalists even more than the possibility of a copper mine on Gambier Island at the mouth of the sound.

Rich is demanding fast action. Although he agrees with Mair that "they're not going to start digging for copper tomorrow," he is calling for a prompt decision on the Gambier Island issue. "It's not just the Islands Trust. It's the people that depend on the Islands Trust to look out for their interests in saving Howe Sound and saving the Islands," he said.

"The most difficult thing now is the uncertainty and I think we have to clear away the uncertainty," the minister said.

However he was unwilling to state his personal view on Gambier Island development until the government "gets a good handle on just what this entails. If you listen to some people it would have a very minor impact; if you listen to others it has an enormous impact occupying something like 70 per cent of the island and laying it bare."

Fishermen put trout in peril

John Cartwright of the provincial fish and wildlife branch said bullheads will soon enter the Pennask Lake system, one of B.C.'s major trout egg producing areas.

Cartwright said in an interview that bullheads, which compete with trout for food, have already turned nearby Hatheuma Lake into an ecological disaster and it's just a matter of time before the voracious feeder enters Pennask Lake.

The biologist described bullheads, also called sculpins, as extremely aggressive and rapdily reproductive.

Pennask Lake is about 80 kilometres south of this southern Interior city and the lake system produces about 50 per cent of the trout eggs required by the province for its lake stocking program.

Cartwright said fishermen carried live bullheads (to be used as bait) from Okanagan lake to Hatheuma Lake about four years ago and virtually destroyed trout fishing potential at Hatheuma. He fears the same will happen at Pennask.

He said it would cost $80,000 to rid the lake of bullheads and other related pests.

Easy access spoiling B.C. backwood lakes

KAMLOOPS (CP) — Easy access to remote British Columbia lakes is spoiling the outdoors experience for tourists from outside the province, says Dick McMasters, spokesman for B.C. Fish Camp Operators Association.

McMasters says an excess of small logging roads is making every lake accessible by car. The roads should be closed to the public and the ground reforested, he said.

"There is a fundamental difference between resource management for the total population of B.C. and resource management that is tourist oriented," he told an association meeting on the weekend.

Super municipality? Nobody in city interested

By NORMAN GIDNEY

The spectre of amalgamation reared its head Tuesday night at a Victoria mayoralty candidates meeting but all four men running for the city's top job rejected a super municipality for the region.

A Saanich resident posed the question at the city hall "town meeting."

Ald. Bill Tindall said he would welcome an amalgamation proposal from that municipality but it ought to come from Saanich, not Victoria.

"I'm not a supporter of total amalgamation," said Ald. Murray Glazier.

He said police and fire departments ought to be amalgamated, and such services as transit and public libraries should be considered a regional service.

Ald. John Hayes agreed that there were benefits in sharing services, "but anyone who thinks it would save money is wrong."

The first thing the new amalgamated council would argue about would be where to build the new city hall, he said.

David Borgstrom said he would "sit on the line" on the issue, noting that the police were strongly anti-amalgamationist.

"I am very wary of amalgamation."

The CFAX-sponsored debate, which was attended by only 30 persons, generated some sparks between Tindall and Glazier when the latter said the downtown Freewheeler bus scheme initiated by Tindall was a waste of money and that drivers and passengers alike were complaining about it.

"It was rather hastily put together and implemented and has to be changed," said Glazier who also condemned the provincial goverment for "dumping" the B.C. Hydro bus system on the municipalities.

Tindall, a vice chairman of the Urban Transit Authority, said this statement was false and said that Victoria bus drivers had endorsed his campaign.

An official of Local 109 of the Amalgamated Transit Union, which represents about 300 drivers and mechanics employed by Hydro in the region, said today it has formally backed Tindall for mayor.

Hayes supporter Gene Miller, publisher of the weekly Monday Magazine, also zeroed in on Tindall at the question period, asking what qualifications he had beyond serving eight years as alderman and on various other boards.

A department store clerk may have years of experience but is not necessarily qualified to be vice-president of the chain, said Miller, who also suggested the others lacked charisma and leadership qualities.

"A leader has followers," said Miller. "Gentlemen, we have an empty hall."

Tindall said he had the leadership qualifications to take Victoria into the 1980s.

Glazier commented: "I wish there were a better way to elect people than the size of their ads or the skill and agility of the people who write their stuff." He said the relevant material for voters to consider was the candidate's personal and professional background and his record, "not the fluff you write on your kitchen table or hire somebody to write."

"I resent that," interjected Tindall.

"I read your ads and wouldn't accuse you of having them professionally written," replied Glazier.

Tindall said Glazier had started advertising his campaign weeks before any of the other candidates, while Hayes stated that the voters didn't want to hear "a whole bunch of stuff" about his job history. They wanted to know "exactly what you want to do in the next two years."

Borgstrom said with his background in social work and probation service, he thought of himself as a grassroots person. He drove a cab for a year to pay his fees at UVic and, he told Miller, "I've even worked for Monday Magazine back in the hard, hard days."

Park work delay favored

Almost all mayoralty and aldermanic candidates in Victoria favor a moratorium on further development of Beacon Hill park until a comprehensive plan can be drafted.

The Beacon Hill Park Association said it had polled all the candidates and found only aldermanic hopeful Dermod Travis opposed to such a scheme. Incumbent Ald. Bob Wright, who is up for re-election, said a moratorium is "a cop-out" but was opposed to any further major development in the park.

All four mayoralty candidates — Ald. Bill Tindall, Ald. Murray Glazier, Ald. John Hayes and David Borgstrom — said they were in favor.

The question the BHPA asked was:

Are you in favor of a moratorium on development in Beacon Hill Park until a publicly accepted comprehensive plan for the park is worked out, "development" referring to the implementation of sidewalks, paths and parking facilities, as well as buildings and new roads, etc., emergencies being excepted?

Limited free parking

All municipal parking lots in downtown Victoria should be free for the first two hours on weekdays to attract more people downtown, Victoria aldermanic candidate Dermod Travis said today.

"For a vibrant, exciting downtown core we must attract consumers, obviously the basic foundation to any real change or progress," he said in a statement.

Downtown merchants will have to offer Victorians more than just shopping centres if downtown is to become a centre for people and culture.

Free parking would be the first step, he said. Proof of purchase would entitle a driver to two free hours in one of the four downtown parkades owned by the city from Monday to Thursday, he said.

Rail safety 'near danger point'

OTTAWA (CP) — Commissioner J. A. D. Magee of the Canadian transport commission warned MPs Tuesday night that the country is reaching a danger point in railway safety.

The staff and money needed to police safety standards on the thousands of miles of railway and equipment and practices aboard trains is shrinking, Magee told the Commons transport committee seeking information on the derailment of a CP Rail train Saturday night in Mississauga, Ont.

Some 220,000 persons had to be evacuated from the community near Toronto because of explosions and problems posed by deadly chemicals carried by the train.

Commission chairman Edgar Benson said last week that there are only 78 inspectors on duty across Canada and that another 100 at least are needed.

Magee said Tuesday night that treasury board, following the government's restraint program, has ordered the commission to further trim its staff by another 100. Some of them were from the railway transport committee which oversees railway safety.

In the aftermath of the derailment and despite official assurances that the evacuated area of Mississauga was free of looters, some families discovered their homes had been ransacked in their absence, a Peel Regional police officer says.

The officer, who did not want his name used, said the break-ins were mostly in residential areas because those areas are not as well-lighted as commercial districts.

Earlier in the day, Sgt. Ed Reynolds, also of Peel Regional Police said nothing of major consequence had been reported.

Earlier, three Mississauga men were charged with breaking, entering and theft after police recovered a trunk load of goods taken from three evacuated homes.

The car had been allowed into the evacuated area after three men told police they wanted to feed a pet dog which had been left without food and water.

Meanwhile, in Vancouver, the city's emergency program planner said Tuesday, the city's evacuation plan is an outdated scheme based on Second World War thinking.

Mel Blaney said he has been pleading with federal and provincial officials to get it updated.

The city's layout, dependent on bridges as escape routes, makes him wonder whether a modern evacuation plan could be devised, he said.

Blaney said he also is concerned about the CP Rail mashalling yard, which was described by a federal study group as the most hazardous downtown yard in Canada.

Firm stand on heritage house

A heritage house at 1121 Pandora which the owners tried unsuccessfully for several years to give away for $1 must be preserved if Morguard Properties Ltd. wants approval for a land assembly project on the site.

Victoria city council's land-use planning committee decided Tuesday that Morguard must relocate and preserve the 94-year-old wooden frame building if it wants city approval for a plan to put together a number of lots in the area for a development site.

Ald. John Hayes, a former employee of Morguard, had said at an earlier committee meeting he had tried to sell the house for $1 if someone would move it off the property but there were no takers.

A proposal to move it directly across Harris Green on to a narrow city-owned lot — now the dead end unused Rebecca Street — was made before by Ald. Bill McElroy, but committee chairman Ald. Bob Wright's views prevailed.

He said nobody questioned the need to save the house, which was built in 1885 by plumber Thomas Wilson and is on the city's primary "A" list of valuable homes.

"It's a lovely little house, but for the city to get into the relocation business would be a fiasco," he said.

The city heritage inventory describes 1121 Pandora as "a very well-preserved Victorian Italianate house" and "a major supportive element in maintaining the heritage flavor of Harris Green."

The house has been vacant for months. Vandals have smashed all the windows and done some damage to the interior.

Rommel honored

CAIRO (AP) — Manfred Rommel, son of the Second World War's Desert Fox, was made an honorary citizen of Cairo during a meeting with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat. Rommel, who is the mayor of Stuttgart, West Germany, is in Cairo to join representatives of the former warring nations to honor the dead of the Battle of El-Alamein.

Students show up adult apathy

By AB KENT

Students gave apathetic adults a lesson Tuesday by outnumbering grown-ups by more than three to one at an all-candidate meeting for school board hopefuls at Central Junior Secondary.

And it was the youngsters who did all the questioning of six new candidates and two incumbents running for seats on Greater Victoria School Board.

The questions ranged from subjects like smoking and vandalism to taxes and teacher tenure.

Two candidates, including incumbent chairman Carol Pickup, agreed with a student that there should be ways of easing ineffective teachers out of the system, a process not possible at present because of tenure.

The student said he thinks that once teachers pass probation and get tenure, they have too much security.

Candidate Mike Hutchison said it would be ideal to maintain teachers on merit, but it would mean assessment.

"One of the most crucial things about teaching is the need for freedom," he said, adding teachers must not be under compulsion to conform and tenure is a way of allowing the freedom to teach.

Joan Dayton agreed there are teachers who should not be in the system while others deserve tenure.

"Maybe there should be better entrance requirements, early training and probationary assessment," she suggested.

Lavinia Greenwood compared teachers with other professions in which there is peer assessment.

However, she said a person who does not like the doctor or lawyer he is consulting has the option of going to another.

Greenwood said the school system should allow parents the opportunity to send children to the teacher of their choice.

Candidate Allister Frame noted that although trustees get to spend a $55 million budget, the students had turned out in greater numbers than taxpayers to discuss the election.

"I'm learning the real meaning of apathy," he said.

A girl student asked what the candidates would do about vandalism in the schools.

Pickup said it can be reduced with parent committees and developing a bettter feeling among students for their schools.

Vandalism will be curbed when students decide school is their place, Hutchison said.

The girl replied that at Colquitz there has been less vandalism since the school was spruced up by repairing damage and repainting.

Terrence Hackett was asked how as a trustee he proposed to improve English standards.

Classes should be cut to 20, he said, and teacher aides would help with marking written assignments and more writing would be assigned.

The candidates were also asked why trustees rejected a proposed teacher salary settlement of 9.48 per cent this week.

Pickup said certain trustees felt the recommendation was beyond a justifiable increase.

If all trustees approve of higher spending would the candidates favor raising taxes?

Not all of the candidates are in favor of higher spending, Hackett said, adding they are all interested in spending where it is necessary to provide the best possible education.

Candidates John Young and Joan Johnston both made statements but were unable to remain for the question period.

Incumbent Young said students deserve more opportunities like work experience and said teachers and principals have more power than trustees.

"It is easier to land a man on the moon than to change the schools," Young said.

Services set for former Victoria chief

Funeral services will be held at the Chapel of First Memorial, 4725 Falaise Drive, Friday at 1:30 p.m. for James E. Bayliss, a former Victoria fire chief who died here Monday at the age of 76.

Born in Nanaimo, he was a member of the Victoria fire department for 40 years. In the Second World War, he was granted leave of absence to serve in Britain with the Canadian Corps of Firefighters.

He was appointed chief on Jan. 1, 1958, and retired in March, 1963.

He is survived by his wife Lilian (Lin); son, William R., Nanaimo; daughter, Joan, Victoria; a sister, Luella Mattison, Victoria; three grandchildren and one great grandchild.

Port Hardy's trial adjourned

PORT HARDY — The trial of Port Hardy municipality, charged with violating the Federal Fisheries Act, has been adjourned a third time — this time to Jan. 6.

The town and Kany Construction are charged separately with six counts of depositing and allowing to be deposited silt in a fish-bearing stream.

U.S. heel on Rhodesia may continue

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter wants to continue U.S. economic sanctions against Zimbabwe Rhodesia while the contending factions in that country try to work out a peace settlement, administration officials say.

Under congressional statute, the sanctions would expire at midnight tonight unless Carter declares it in the national interest to maintain them.

Congress has the right to overturn Carter's decision but officials said they believe Congress will agree to retain the sanctions.

'Not going to do stupid thing because of Lord Carrington'

LONDON (Reuter) — Patriotic Front guerrilla leaders insisted today they will not meet any deadline set for reaching agreement at the Zimbabwe Rhodesia peace talks, now in their 10th week.

British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington, chairman of the conference, wants a decision this week on his plans for new elections in the breakaway British colony under the authority of a British-appointed governor.

But Willie Musuruwa, a spokesman for the front, said: "We are not going to do stupid things just because Lord Carrington wants us to meet a deadline.

"We want to achieve a real peace. His plans will plunge us into a worse war."

Prime Minister Abel Muzorewa's biracial government in Salisbury, the other party at the talks, has accepted the British proposal.

Lord Carrington hinted Tuesday that if the Patriotic Front does not enter an agreement, the British might be prepared to make a bilateral settlement with Muzorewa.

"We want and shall continue to strive for a settlement involving all parties," Carrington told the House of Commons. "This would be the surest guarantee of an immediate end to the war."

He was moving the last stage of the parliamentary measures required by the government to install a British governor in Salisbury, an act which would give legality to Zimbabwe Rhodesia as an independent country.

Under the British plan, Muzorewa would then relinquish power to the governor, who would help maintain a ceasefire in the bush war and set up new elections, with the Patriotic Front taking part for the first time.

But the details of the British proposals have been met with strong objections from guerrilla leaders Robert Mugabe and Joshua Nkomo, mainly because they say the two-month election period is too short and that there is no provision for integrating the forces of the two warring sides during the transition period.

Guerrillas renewing border thrust

SALISBURY (Reuter) — Patriotic Front guerrillas have again attacked the eastern Zimbabwe Rhodesia border city of Umtali, opening fire on houses in a white suburb, police said today.

No injuries were reported.

It was the fourth guerrilla operation in Umtali in a month. Since Oct. 15 three bombs have exploded in the city, the last of them six days ago. Last Oct. 9 guerrillas fired mortars at a motel and houses in a white suburb.

When bombs fail, Arafat builds PLO bridges

By GEORGE A. KRIMSKY

NEW YORK (AP) — While Yasser Arafat prepares a new generation of potential Palestinian martyrs in the guerrilla war against Israel, his Palestine Liberation Organization is going all out to polish its image and win support in the West.

The ultimate aim of this policy may be to seek a political alternative to the incessant bloodletting.

Arafat's offer to intercede for American hostages held by Iranian revolutionaries in the U.S. embassy in Tehran is one more step in his bridge-building campaign to win friends and debtors among Israel's traditional supporters.

In recent months, the PLO has forged links in Western Europe and gained some public relations mileage in the United States, stronghold of Israel's international support.

Recent history has demonstrated, however, that such bridges can collapse overnight in the wake of a Palestinian terrorist strike. Alternating his roles between guerrilla leader and international mediator has been the hallmark of Arafat's mercurial leadership and the key to his own survival within the diverse Palestinian movement.

George A. Krimsky, who wrote the following analysis, returned recently from Beirut, Lebanon, where for two years he covered the Palestine Liberation Organization and other Middle East news for The Associated Press.

A pattern is evident: When Arafat foresees clear rewards on the political front, he dons his statesman's cap, as he now is doing. When political moves appear doomed, he adopts the terror-war option, often because the more militant of those around him are pressuring him.

The 49-year-old PLO chief often complained after the Lebanese civil war, which diverted and depleted his forces for nearly two years, that the 1975-76 moratorium on cross-border raids against Israel gained nothing for his movement in the international arena.

When the PLO saw no gain for it in Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's peace initiative with Israel, Arafat threw in the diplomatic towel, assumed a lead in the Arab hard-line opposition and unleashed a bloody raid against the Israelis on the Tel Aviv-Haifa highway in early 1978.

He chose then to risk his flimsy Western bridges because they took him nowhere, his associates said at the time. Israel's subsequent invasion of Lebanon, which caused fewer Palestinian losses than many expected, bolstered Arafat's stock in the Arab community and inspired new confidence among his 12,000-man guerrilla forces.

But Israel's stepped-up punishment raids against guerrilla strongholds this year have taken their toll, and Arafat has again turned to the political stage.

He broke the ice with Austria's chancellor, Bruno Kreisky, last summer and later got an unexpectedly warm welcome in Spain. Late last month, the Italian government bestowed its "political recognition" on the PLO and high Belgian officials met with an Arafat emissary in what the PLO interpreted as de-facto recognition.

In the United States, the resignation of Andrew Young as U.S. ambassador to the United Nations following his unauthorized contacts with the PLO touched off a demand among many of Young's fellow blacks for U.S. recognition of the guerrilla organization, which regards itself as a liberation movement. Arafat warmly greeted a delegation of black American leaders in Beirut last month and has been promoting an over-all Arab alliance with them in an effort to change U.S. policy toward the Arab cause.

A recent New York Times-CBS survey indicated that 42 per cent of Americans who have heard of the PLO believe the United States should negotiate with Arafat's organization.

And a group of prominent Americans recommended this month that Washington modify its refusal to talk with the PLO by establishing "informal contacts" with the organization in an effort to change its current stand against Israeli recognition.

The extent to which Arafat's bridges take hold will depend a great deal on his willingness to convince critics that statesmanship is a better option than terror.

Refugee remains found

MANILA, Philippines (UPI) — Filipino hunters have found the remains of about 60 Vietnamese refugees apparently shipwrecked at a remote Philippine island, a Manila newspaper reported today.

A spokesman for a Philippine Navy task force in charge of refugee affairs said there was no information on the report in The Times Journal, which attributed the discovery to unspecified sources.

The report said bones, tattered clothes, life rafts and personal belongings were strewn about a forested government reservation on Mindoro Island, 90 miles south of Manila.

Part of the fishing junk with Vietnamese markings still pokes into the treacherous waters of Calavite Point, where it apparently struck the reefs, the report said.

The area reportedly was visited by hunters and peaceful Mangyan tribesmen who buried some of the remains two weeks ago. The Journal said six of the estimated 60 refugees survived but this could not be confirmed.

Project studied

MADRID (AP) — Spain and Morocco have agreed to jointly study a project to build a tunnel under the Straits of Gibraltar to link Europe and Africa, Moroccan Foreign Minister Mohammed Bucetta said.

Anti-Israel violence feared over mayor

JERUSALEM (AP) — A committee of Israel's cabinet decided today to expel Nablus Mayor Bassam Shakaa from the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River, the government announced.

Prime Minister Menachem Begin's cabinet met as the secret ministerial defence committee to consider Shakaa's case, which left the government in a quandary.

If the firebrand Nablus mayor is expelled, the West Bank is expected to erupt in a spasm of anti-Israeli violence — an embarrassment while Israel is negotiating the terms of Palestinian autonomy with Egypt and the United States.

But the government would appear weak if it backed off from its earlier decision to banish Shakaa, who said he understood the motivation of Palestinian guerrillas who ambushed a busload of Israelis in March, 1978, leaving 34 dead in the worst terror raid in Israel's history.

Shakaa was arrested Sunday, and since then West Bank Palestinians generally remained calm although some rock-throwing incidents were reported.

But political activity has been intense as leading West Bank mayors resigned or threatened to resign if Israel did not free Shakaa and allow him to return to Nablus.

But after the ministerial defence committee met, Begin's aide, Ephriam Poran, announced: "It was decided to leave as is the decision regarding the procedures for the expulsion of Bassam Shakaa."

Shakaa still has a petition pending before the Israeli Supreme Court to nullify the expulsion order. There was no immediate word on when the court would consider the petition.

In Beirut, Lebanon, meanwhile, Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization urged the mayors of the West Bank to "react collectively" to Israel's decision to expel the mayor.

The PLO executive committee also exhorted the Arabs of the Israeli-occupied region to "escalate struggle against the Israeli enemy."

"The PLO statement meant that the mayors should either resign together or stay on together," a PLO source explained. "The real aim of the (Israeli) enemy is to try to fragment the Palestinian people and their leadership, and we will never let the Israelis have their way."

Seafood giveaway protested

SEATTLE (AP) — The needy in the Seattle area will be able to eat free seafood for Thanksgiving, but fisherman Soren Sorenson thinks giving away 100,000 pounds of rockfish is no way to run a business.

He and others testifying before the International Trade Commission want strong barriers against foreign fish to give fishermen from Washington, Oregon, California and Alaska a chance to make money.

They say imports from foreign fishermen — including Canadians — drive prices below the break-even point. About 75 per cent of the bottom fish eaten by Americans is imported, officials say.

Sorenson's trawler was built in 1978 to cash in on the widely-publicized new opportunity in groundfish. The boat lost $102,000 in 1978 and another $68,000 this year.

When Sorenson returned recently with 250,000 pounds of rockfish, New England Fish Co. would take only 75,000 pounds, he said.

Another processor offered 10½ cents per pound for the fish — 11 cents less than the official price but Sorenson refused. As head of the trawlers negotiating organization, Sorenson said he'd "be hung up on the wall if I sold my fish for half price."

He had the fish filleted and frozen. The King County Council Tuesday paid that cost in return for the fish, which will be donated to area food banks.

Sorenson's predicament was echoed by several others speaking Tuesday to the commission, which winds up three days of hearings today. The marketing association, represented by Seattle lawyer Henry Haugen, is trying to convince the five-member commission that the groundfish industry has been hurt by foreign competition and needs tariff protection.

Haugen asked for a quota rolling back groundfish imports to 1977 levels, cutbacks in the import quota by 10 per cent a year for the next five years and a 30-per-cent tariff on imported fish.

Trade target is N.J.

NEW YORK (CP) — A Canadian trade mission, headed by Ambassador Peter Towe, focussed today on New Jersey, a state which is Canada's best foreign customer.

Gov. Brendan Byrne of New Jersey proclaimed the day Canada Day in the state, highlighted by a series of senior-level meetings of Canadian and American businessmen.

Mass transit was a major consideration for the businessmen and officials of Canada and New Jersey.

Canada wants a share of the new bus and railway car business as the United States tries to get the commuter out of his car into mass transit.

President Carter's proposed tax on windfall oil profits, now before Congress, is to put billions of dollars toward revamping the urban transit system in the U.S., which has been decaying for years.

Canadian sales of mass transit equipment in the United States were $100 million in 1978.

Animals dead from northern spill

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — A spokesman for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration working on the oil spill from a grounded Japanese fishing vessel on St. Paul Island said Tuesday there has been a very high kill of small animals around the salt water lagoon near the village.

Burl Wescott said three-inch-deep rows of dead snails and other mollusks lined the shore. Wescott estimated the oil may have killed half of the small animals, a main food source for migratory birds.

He said worms were also dying which indicates the diesel fuel is penetrating the sand.

Work crews hope to have the area clean before the season's last group of migratory birds comes through. Wescott said a full damage assessment could take another week.

A total of five dead seal pups have been found so far.

Coast guard spokesmen said only one hold of the Ryuyo Maru No. 2 was watertight at present. He said it looks like it may not be possible to refloat the vessel.

The coast guard said two options will be considered once the remaining oil is pumped out of the vessel. One is to scuttle the ship and leave it on the rocks. The other is to pull it off the rocks and sink it.

Former SS officer said war criminal

MUNICH (Reuter) — Police have arrested a former colonel in the Nazi German SS (elite guard) on suspicion of wartime murders of Soviet civilians, the Bavarian justice authorities said today.

Kurt Christmann, 72, who commanded an SS liquidation commando unit in the area of Krasnodar, is reported to have ordered 105 people to be gassed or shot between August, 1942, and February, 1943.

The public prosecutor's office said most of his victims were Jews and included women, children and old people.

More killing follows coup

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (UPI) — Leftist death squads have unleashed a wave of assassinations against alleged rightist terrorists in an escalation of the violence that triggered last month's military coup.

The 11 slayings in the past two days proved the ruling civilian-military junta that ousted President Carlos H. Romero Oct. 15 has been unable to dampen the violence it had hoped to end. Clashes in the last month have left more than 100 people dead.

All the 11 victims were rightists and thought to be members of the hated Nationalist Democratic Organization, a right-wing paramilitary group of former policemen and national guardsmen accused of torturing and killing dozens of Romero opponents.

On Tuesday, about 10 masked gunmen broke into the home of the six Rivera brothers in the small town of El Tule, 105 miles northwest of the capital, and shot all of them to death, police said.

Authorities said gunmen Monday night raided the village of Jutiapa, 15 miles from El Tule, captured three members of the Gonzalez family and two members of the Chavarria family, bound them, dragged them into a plaza and killed them.

Both gangs of assassins identified themselves as members of the Popular Liberation Front, the guerrilla arm of the Popular Revolutionary Bloc, a powerful alliance of up to 60,000 leftist students, workers and peasants.

The rightist Nationalist Democratic Organization, outlawed last week by the five-man junta, has vowed to continue to "fight international subversion and adapt to the new forms of combat in defense of democracy that are coming nearer."

Anti-Zionist cell claims ambush

LISBON (AP) — An anti-Zionist group claimed responsibility for a grenade and sub-machine-gun ambush that wounded Israel's ambassador to Portugal, killed his bodyguard, and injured three other persons.

Portugese national radio said a group calling itself the International Militant Workers telephoned and claimed responsibility for Tuesday's attack.

The radio quoted the caller as saying the group was opposed to "capitalism and imperialism as represented by Zionists." The caller said there will be other attacks.

The attack occurred as Ambassador Ephraim Eldar's car drove up to the Israeli chancellery shortly before 10 a.m. Police said the 55-year-old ambassador was saved by staying in the car, but a bullet broke a bone in his right forearm and another wounded him in the thigh.

Cyclist starts shootout

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (AP) — Patrolman Michael Young had stopped two youths to question them about the bicycle they were riding on a quiet residential street when one of them pulled a gun, leading to a three-hour gun battle.

When the mid-day drama was over, the gunman was dead and three policemen were wounded, one critically. A fourth policmen escaped with only a bruise when a gunshot struck his bulletproof vest.

Javier Sanchez, 19, was gunned down by police Tuesday after he shot Young and later ambushed policemen from a house in which he was hiding, officials said.

Sgt. Coy Boone, 34, was in critical condition early today after being shot in the head and neck. Patrolman Oscar Gallo, 30, was in satisfactory condition with a gunshot wound to the arm, and Young, 25, was in fair condition with wounds to the hand and thigh.

The second youth, who fled when the shooting started, was being sought today, police said.

Sparks fire trolley

UPPER DARBY, Pa. (AP) — A fire aboard a rush-hour commuter trolley sent 53 passengers to hospitals with burns and seared lungs in the latest accident to hit Philadelphia's transit system.

"I thought that I was dead," said Pat Wotek, who was treated at Delaware County hospital. "The smoke was all around, and I thought, 'Well, this is the way people die.' Then all of a sudden they opened a door and I could breathe."

A total of 31 victims were admitted to four hospitals Tuesday. Most were listed in stable condition, but three patients at Crozer-Chester Medical Centre were in serious condition with burns.

Officials of the Southeastern Pennsylvania Transportation Authority said the fire was under investigation and refused to comment, but witnesses said it started with a shower of sparks at the front of the 48-year-old trolley car.

Some Quebec hospital workers defy no-strike law

MONTREAL (CP) — Workers at a half-dozen Quebec hospitals staged illegal walkouts Tuesday in defiance of special legislation temporarily suspending their right to strike, while other public service employees met to decide whether to follow suit.

The 200,000-member "common front" of education and hospital workers called off an unlimited strike planned for Tuesday after the government passed a special law making the planned strike illegal.

Another union, the 37,000-member civil servants' union, rejected an executive recommendation to defy the law and returned to work.

Leaders of the common front were to meet today to decide whether their members are angry enough to defy the legislation en masse, and early vote results from some schools and hospitals indicate they may well be.

A meeting of Montreal-area delegates of the Confederation of National Trade Unions — the largest of three labor federations in the common front — has recommended its members approve strike action for midnight Thursday night in the province's hospitals and social affairs institutions.

The law, passed in a special session of the national assembly late Monday night, provides for fines of between $100 and $5,000 a day for union leaders and $10 and $50 for individuals who violate it. A total of 275,000 people are affected.

But confederation president Norbert Rodrigue said Tuesday the labor federation would support any of its affiliates who decided to defy the anti-strike legislation.

Early vote results from some Montreal hospitals showed non-professional employees affiliated with the confederation strongly favor beginning unlimited strikes.

Workers at Ste. Justine children's hospital and Hotel-Dieu hospital have voted in favor of a walkout, while there were brief work stoppages at other hospitals and social service centres Tuesday as workers there "studied" the law.

But government officials reported that essential services were maintained.

Helene Wavroch, a spokesman for a group of 23,000 nurses represented by the Cartel des Organismes Professionels de la Sante, said the union had called off its strike planned for Thursday.

"But after that, we can't guarantee anything," she warned.

The other major nurses' unions, the 7,000-member Federation Quebecoisedes Infirmieres et Infirmiers, will "take up pressure tactics again on Thursday."

Meanwhile, nearly all 800 members of the Montreal Teachers' Association, the largest local under the independent Protestant Association of Protestant School Teachers, voted in a show of hands to give their union executive a mandate to call a strike as soon as it saw fit.

However, the association indicated it would not strike alone, and said any strike would have to be co-ordinated with affiliated teachers' unions under the common front.

The 85,000-member Centrale de l'Enseignement du Quebec, the province's largest teachers' federation, said it will spend the rest of the week consulting its members on how to react to the law.

Students are getting in on the act as well.

Student walkouts disrupted classes at two Montreal-area high schools Tuesday, and the Association Nationale des Etudiants du Quebec has issued a statement saying it will "line itself up on the workers' side against the government and its anti-people policies."

Small firms ask tax cut

OTTAWA (CP) — A small business lobby group, claiming unprecedented high borrowing costs and threat of bankruptcy has asked the government to give them the same tax break on interest costs as large corporations now receive.

The Canadian Organization of Small Business, in a submission today to Finance Minister John Crosbie, said that a doubling of currently-allowed deductions of interest charges against taxable income would put small firms on the same tax footing as bigger companies.

Small business now can write off 25 per cent of interest charges, a rate proportional to the 25 per-cent small business tax rate. By contrast, larger firms can deduct 46 per cent of charges, again in line with the large corporation tax rate of 46 per cent.

In effect, though paying a lower corporate tax rate, small businesses want to double their eligible deduction to the level allowed for larger firms, the organization says.

The association president, Dan Horigan and Ian Kennedy, general manager, met this morning with Ron Ritchie, parliamentary secretary to the finance minister.

Though Kennedy had no estimate of the cost of the tax relief meaure, he argued that small business investment and employment could be stimulated as a result.

"Recession is looming . . . . Unless the impact of bank rate increases is cushioned by our proposal, all Canadians face a very dreary 1980 and beyond," he said.

Although a lower rate of tax applies to small business, Kennedy said current tax benefits enable large cororations to reduce the effective tax rate to near the small business rate.

The Toronto-based organization represents about 700 members and is a recent rival to the Canadian Federation of Independent Business.

Glasses rosy despite turn

OTTAWA (CP) — Consumers continue to be optimistic about their own lot despite a worsening outlook for the economy in general, says a Conference Board in Canada survey released today.

The survey of consumer buying intentions, published four times a year, measures consumer confidence. For the third quarter, this index of that confidence was 107.4, down slightly from 108.7 in the second quarter and up from 102.4 a year earlier.

The index has been above 100 during the last 1½ years, suggesting "a significant improvement in the confidence" of consumers recently compared with that during 1974-1977.

The survey shows consumers continue to feel that the present is a good time to make a major purchase.

The proportion of respondents who expected the inflation rate to rise increased sharply in the latest survey and reached a five-year high.

Respondents were also more pessimistic for improved economic conditions during the coming months than they were last spring.

The proportion of respondents who said that current job prospects look bright was 14.2 per cent on a seasonally-adjusted basis, up from 11.6 per cent in the second-quarter survey and 10.6 per cent a year earlier.

The financial position of consumers still appears strong with 23.7 per cent of respondents stating that their family's financial position had improved during the last six months.

Plane chased by red lights

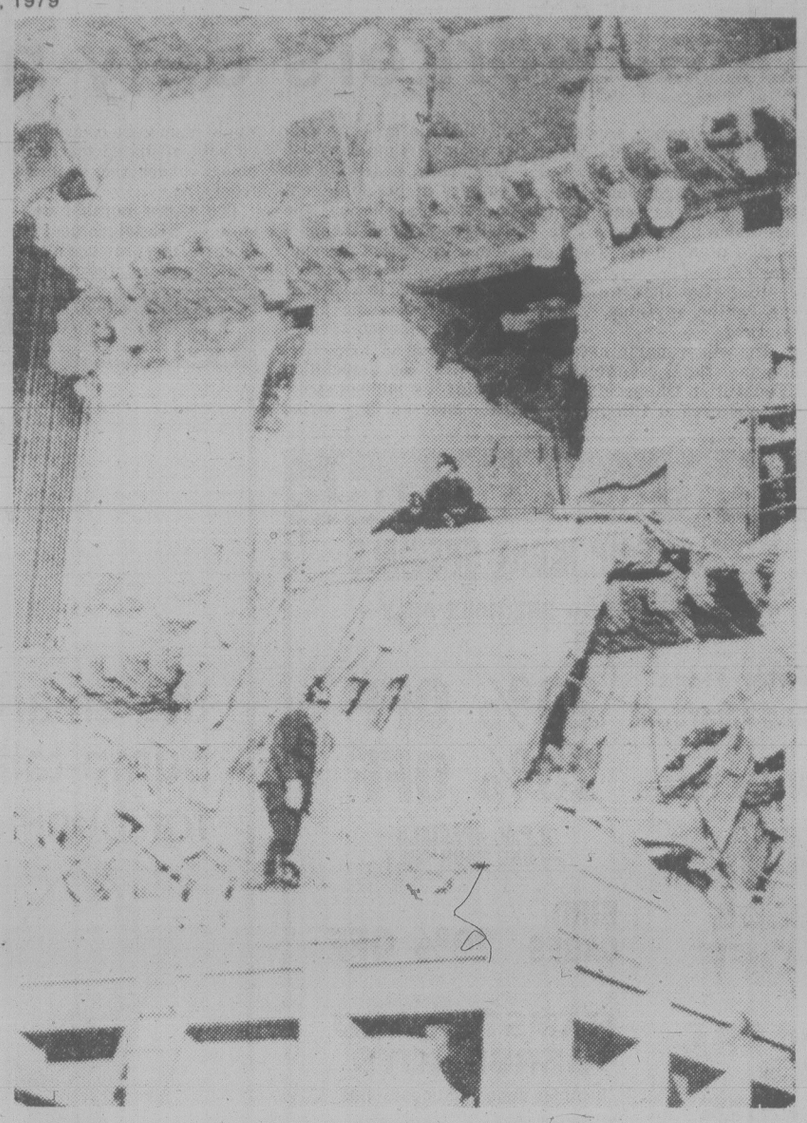
MADRID (Reuter) — An airline pilot who made an emergency landing after reporting his plane was being followed by objects in the sky said Tuesday it was one of the most frightening experiences of his life.

The Spanish commercial jetliner with 119 passengers landed in Valencia Sunday night after Captain Javier Lerdo-Tejeda said he was being chased by unidentified flying objects. The plane was flying from Majorca to the Canary Islands.

Lerdo-Tejeda, who has been a pilot for more than 15 years, told reporters two bright red lights followed the plane for 15 minutes.

"I have never seen anything like it before," he said. "They kept closing in all the time."

He said he immediately descended from cruising altitude but the UFO stayed on his tail.



25 DIED, and possibly more, when a violent explosion led to the collapse of three floors of a hospital in Parma, Italy. Rescue teams are digging cautiously through the rubble, looking for more patients, medical staff and visitors. The blast is believed to have originated with a methane gas cylinder in the cardiac wing.

Gays now on force

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — About half of the latest group of recruits sworn in as San Francisco police reflect the changing face of the department's employees — minority, female and-or gay.

Of 47 trainees who took the oath Tuesday, 23 were minorities whose recruitment helps the city settle a discrimination suit against the police department, authorities said.

And a few of the recruits were homosexuals, who will be the city's first recruited gay policemen if they pass their eight-month training program. They asked officials not to identify them.

"We had to really put out an effort to get the minorities," said Inspector Kelly Waterfield, police recruitment director. He said about 5,400 took the test in April.

The response by homosexuals was better than expected said Les Morgan, director of a recruitment program for gay policemen that began in October, 1978.

"We're very proud of the response" to the push by the Gay Outreach Program, Morgan said. Of the 91 homosexuals who took the test, 16 were selected.

The federal court agreement approved last spring applies to women, blacks, Hispanics, Asians and other ethnic minorities, but not to homosexuals.

Morgan said his group will continue to offer guidance to the gay trainees so "they don't feel abandoned."

"They're most certainly planning on being open with fellow officers," Morgan said. "But they're not going to make an issue of it."

Although exact figures were not available Tuesday, Inspector Waterfield said of the 1,560 policemen on the force, less than 10 per cent are black.

Women, blacks, Asians, Hispanics and other ethnic minorities make up about 25 per cent of the force.

Carter orders airlift of food to Thailand

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration is preparing an immediate airlift of food to starving refugees in Thailand while private relief agencies try to raise $100 million in contributions to help ease the crisis in Indochina.

"Two and a half million people face starvation in the next few months unless food reaches them," said Matthew Nimitz, acting U.S. co-ordinator for refugees.

Rosalynn Carter, who visited Cambodian refugee camps in Thailand last week, announced Tuesday that President Carter has ordered deliveries by air of vegetable oils, special food for infants and youngsters, and other supplies.

The shipment is mainly to help young children, many of whom suffer from malnutrition. Their physical and mental development will be impaired without adequate food.

Officials said the airlift will begin as soon as the supplies can be located and assembled for shipping, but they gave no precise timetable.

Meanwhile, a spokesman for the U.S. state department said an air shipment of 45 metric tons of infant formula arrived in Bangkok on Monday.

Mrs. Carter announced the presidential actions at a White House meeting of executives from about 30 relief agencies who held a day-long conference to decide how to improve their efforts to help the refugees.

Afterward, Rev. Theodore Hesburgh, president of Notre Dame University, said he believes the groups should raise $100 million in private contributions. About $30 million has been donated so far.

"Somehow, using every means possible, we think we can save this second holocaust from taking place," he told reporters later. "We are committed to every possible, conceivable effort that will get to these people before they die."

Most of the aid to Thailand and Cambodia goes through relief agencies, such as UNICEF, CARE and the Red Cross.

Carter, acting at his wife's behest, also ordered an immediate $2-million grant to UNICEF to buy rice for the refugees, whose food supply was said to be for less than 30 days.

Mrs. Carter said her husband also is increasing the number of refugees from Thailand to be resettled in the United States. So most of the U.S. monthly quota of 14,000 refugees will be filled by persons from Thai camps rather than by boat people now in Malaysia and Hong Kong.

★ Canada slams Vietnam

Julie Loranger, Canada's delegate in the General Assembly's committee on social, humanitarian and cultural affairs, said that boat people are still fleeing Vietnam, although their numbers have dropped since the conference on refugees held in Geneva last summer.

"Departures for resettlement countries now exceed new arrivals by boat," she said. "However, in our view, the government of Vietnam has not yet adjusted those policies and practices which are the cause of the problem."

She said such changes are essential for any long-term solution to the problem.

There have been suggestions that the exodus of the boat people was the result of a deliberate policy decision by the Vietnam government to purge the country of undesirable elements, particularly the large ethnic Chinese community.

Peking Opera a masterpiece of technique

Peking Opera. . . elegant mime

By AUDREY JOHNSON

A second viewing, 20 years after the first, only reinforces an original impression that the Peking Opera is a unique distillation and blend of all aspects of the performing arts.

A dozen analogies occur: visually, a wash of pure color with the most delicate and at the same time lively line drawings superimposed; or a complex and vivid tapestry full of life and movement and subtle detail both comic and tragic.

Close to 3,000 Victorians revelled in this encounter in two Tuesday performances at the Royal Theatre.

The evening presentation provided excerpts from several traditional operas. It concluded with the dazzling seventh scene from the full length Story of the White Snake which had formed the matinee program. This episode, Water Flows Over Golden Hill, created a splendid climax that brought the capacity audience to its feet.

The cast responded in kind, clapping and pelting the audience with flowers pulled from arrangements flanking the proscenium.

The story of each excerpt other than the finale could be told in a single line; but it is in the nature of this theatrical genre that something as delicate as The Jade Bracelet — love at first encounter results in a subtle exchange of tokens — be embellished with humor and oblique imagery expressed in embroidery as lavish and at the same time, delicate, as that which decorates the luscious costumes.

To western ears the singing style is certainly foreign. No chest resonance is used either for singing or speaking; the pitch is higher than natural and the resonance as a result of these factors, is nasal. This is deliberate. Not using the natural voice is considered to heighten and in a sense "stylize" the drama, just as the action, make-up and costuming is stylized.

Instrumentation — this part was on tape — relies heavily on percussion but melodies are clear and again, simple.

Of course the magnificence of the Peking Opera is to be found in the perfection of the technique that supports its imagery; the cultivation of the most exquisite facility in expression which illumines and brings vibrant life to this highly formal art. No mime is more elegant and evocative; the slightest hand and finger movement, eye movements, an inclination of the head, the delicate agility of feet. All tell a story more clearly than words.

A high comic sense and absolutely faultless timing invests The Inn of the Three-cornered Intersection with breathless enjoyment: two sword-wielding characters stalk each other in a room furnished only with a table and chair, which the blowing out of a candle has rendered pitch-dark to our and their imaginations.

The use of those two simple props, the cat-like grace and agility with which the actors from time to time leap from the floor to a feather-light landing on the table, is only possible to actors of incredible skill.

Miming reaches its zenith in Autumn River, where our hypnotized eyes see the rocking boat and follow its gyrating course through the rapids.

But the ability of these actors to defy gravity, to use their bodies like bouncing balls, to fill the stage with flying forms in a virtuosic display of perfectly-timed acrobatics, reaches its truly glorious climax in the White Snake finale.

Canadian opera gaining respect

TORONTO (UPI) — The Canadian Opera Company, Canada's finest, added to its growing credentials as a future world class opera company this season with a distinguished "Tristán und Isolde" featuring American soprano Johanna Meier in her debut in the role of Isolde.

Richard Wagner's powerful evocation of the love-death legend is one of the six new productions mounted by the company in its 29th season running from last September into May 1980. "Tristan" is a major undertaking for any opera company and the COC demonstrated that it is completely capable of taking on such a challenge.

The five performances of "Tristan" in late October and earlier this month were almost sold out, as many but not all COC performances are. Attendance figures at the O'Keefe Centre were up 6 per cent last year and are expected to top that this season, with box office sales well over the $1 million mark. The top ticket price is $25.

"This season we are achieving our goal of offering opera throughout the year and giving 50 per cent more performances than last season," COC general director Lotfi Mansouri told UPI in an interview.

"This exhilerating, growing city deserves more than sporadic, brief seasons of opera. What we need now is more financial support. We have to work on an economy budget (nearly $4 million) while meeting the public's expectations of first class performances."

First rate opera is more likely at the COC on a production-to-production basis than at some of the world's great but overrated houses because the schedule of only six operas a season allows for longer than usual rehearsal periods with the principals, anywhere from two to five weeks. The Iranian-born Mansouri, a Telly Savalas look alike who was associated with the Geneva Grand Opera in Switzerland before coming to Toronto in 1976, strives for a strong ensemble of singers for each production, although COC fees can't compare with those paid by a number of American companies.

As the director of "Tristan," Mansouri had high praise for the intelligence and thorough professionalism of Miss Meier, a member of the Metropolitan Opera in New York, and the Tristan, Spas Wenkoff, a West German who has sung the role many times in European houses including the Wagner festival theater in Bayreuth. Mansouri said they "worked beautifully together — no ego trips."

Miss Meier, a soprano from Spearfish, S.D. known for her Mozart and Strauss heroines and is taking on Wagnerian roles slowly, having sung Senta in "The Flying Dutchman" at the Met recently and Eva and Sieglinde elsewhere. She can be expected to sing Elisabeth in "Tannhauser" and Isolde at the Met in the near future.

Master ballet class planned for Thursday

An open master ballet class will be given by the artistic director of the touring Mini-Bolshoi Ballet Company Thursday, the Vancouver Island Ballet Society said today.

The class will start at 4 p.m. at Wendy Marlow Dance Studio on Quadra and there is a $5 fee.

The Mini-Bolshoi is a small touring company of USSR Bolshoi-trained dancers who are performing Wednesday night and Thursday in Victoria.

Winnipeg Ballet's appeal slips

WINNIPEG (CP) — The artistic director of the Royal Winnipeg Ballet says modern dance works may have driven away some season ticket subscribers.

Arnold Spohr says at least part of the reason for a drop of about 400 from last year's season ticket total of 5,200 is the unfavorable audience reaction to some of the modern works performed.

Spohr promises audiences that this year's productions will be a bit more "traditional."

Some modern works require a dancer to "assume stances and postures . . . and stay on the spot for five minutes at a time to portray the conscious and the subconscious," Spohr said.

"Who cares?"

He said that although it's very important "to give the people works or movements they've never seen before, we also have to make contact with our audience."

The Nutcracker is planned for Christmas and Les Sylphides for April, with the season's emphasis on "mixed ballets."

Spohr says he plans to spend more time in Winnipeg rebuilding audiences that may have been lost while the company toured extensively during the last few years.

"It's going to take a couple of years to build up again because we didn't do our public relations with the people of Winnipeg."

The company is also cementing its "Dutch connection" with the recent arrival of choreographer Rudi van Dantzig.

Dutch choreographers "are considered the best in the world," Spohr said.

The company will work with "new, vital, brilliant choreographers," Spohr said, while endeavoring to provide audiences with a pleasing blend of classical and modern dance movement.

Van Dantzig, 46-year-old artistic director of the Dutch National Ballet, is in Winnipeg to set the RWB's production of his Four Last Songs, a ballet van Dantzig based on Richard Strauss's Vier Letzte Lieder.

The work, to be performed in April, is the second Dutch ballet in the RWB's 1979-1980 season. Hans Van Manen's Song Without Words was part of the company's October program.

"There's a tremendous amount of dance" in Four Last Songs, Spohr said, something that he feels should please Winnipeg audiences.

Van Dantzig said it is about "the joys of being alive and alive together, with death as the natural ending," and he calls it "undoubtedly the most romantic thing I've ever written."

While definitely in the classical tradition, the work is "not classical in a sterile way," he said, nor is it romantic with "Hollywood embellishments."

Van Dantzig said he is pleased with the way RWB dancers have responded to his work, particularly John Kaminski and Evelyn Hart.

He also hopes to return later in the season, if the ballet company's board of governors give their approval, to choreograph a full-length, three-hour Romeo and Juliet.

Producer of Jesus joins Brian critics

By BOB THOMAS

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — At the mention of Monty Python's Life of Brian, producer John Heyman lost his customary British cool.

Heyman is the producer of Jesus, a new $6-million film which takes its script directly from the Book of Luke. It is being released by Warner Brothers. So was Brian, which has been assailed as sacriligious by Roman Catholic, Protestant and Jewish clergy.

"I made my deal with Warners six months before they acquired the Monty Python film," said Heyman. "I question the business methods of a company that will self-evidently invite horrendous comparisons.

"The horrible part is to see in Houston, Brian playing in the Galleria theatres 1 and 2 and Jesus in Galleria 2 and 4."

Heyman said he had not seen Brian — "but I read the script long ago and I can see how it would be offensive."

"It is dangerous to play with people's beliefs."

The Oxford-educated Heyman is no babe in the woods of film corporations. He came up through English television, became personal manager for Elizabeth Taylor, Richard Burton, Laurence Harvey and others and, in 1959, formed World Film Services. The company financed and produced prestigious films, among them The Hireling, The Go-Between and Privilege.

"Between 1967 and 1973, I participated in 43 films (but) it was like a sausage factory," he said. "Although I was not ashamed of what I had accomplished, I still wanted to do something I was going to be proud of."

The result: The Genesis Project.

Heyman started the massive undertaking in 1974 with the aim of converting the Bible to film. Called The New Media Bible, the project would be accompanied by an encyclopedia, dictionary and atlas for a complete audio-visual package.

Heyman said he envisions the time when people can watch the Bible unfold on their television screens by inserting video cassettes into home players.

The producer collected 250 scholars in every discipline and admitted there was a lot of "tip-toeing through the denominational tulips."

Filming began with Genesis, then moved to Luke, followed by Acts of the Apostles and Exodus. So far, 33 films have been shot, all in the Holy Land, whenever possible in the areas where the events took place.

Other biblical films have been made in Egypt (The Ten Commandments) Tunisia (Jesus of Nazareth) Utah (The Greatest Story Ever Told) and elsewhere, but only Jesus Christ Superstar was shot in Israel.

He recruited his cast for Jesus among Israeli actors, but after 23 tests he hadn't located Jesus.

"I wanted a Jesus that would not float through the picture," said Heyman. "I wanted him to be accessible, to have muscle, as would someone who had worked 18 years in a carpenter's shop.

The eventual choice for Jesus was British actor Brian Deacon.

Ex-disc jockey joins Mork series

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Jay Thomas, who plays the brash delicatessen owner added to the "Mork and Mindy" series this season, is a rich, brash ex-New York disc jockey and a swinging bachelor.

Thomas, 31, whose real name is John Thomas Terrell, rents an apartment 15 miles from Hollywood at Manhattan Beach. The place is filled with rented furniture.

He also shares an apartment in New York with "The Amazing Needlebaum," a jeweler and comedian who was a regular on Thomas' old radio show.

The New York apartment, which has a 50-foot living room, is spiffily decorated with modern furniture and paintings.

Three years ago Thomas visited Woodstock, N.Y., and bought a cabin that was under construction. He has since added several rooms with 20-foot ceilings. The dwelling is no longer a cabin but a posh, modern home complete with sauna and whirlpool bath.

He's furnished the place with antiques and spends as many winter weekends as possible up in the woods skiing.

A native of Texas who was reared in New Orleans, Thomas drifted around to various colleges in the south earning his way through school as a disc jockey and stand-up comedian. He has investments and real estate holdings in Charlotte, N.C., and other southern cities.

Thomas is a fast talker, ambitious and off-beat. He travels light and has no pets or steady girlfriends to tie him down.

His activities keep him jetting around the country when he's not tied up in "Mork and Mindy" production. His press agent lives in San Diego. His manager lives in Charlotte. His agent lives in New York City.

He's proud of his self-sufficiency, doing his own housekeeping, laundry and cooking. He compares himself with Felix Unger, the Tony Randall character in television's "The Odd Couple."

"I really don't need a wife," Thomas says, "although I like to date a lot of pretty girls. I was married once for about an hour. It didn't work out. I'm a loner. And I travel so much I rarely date one girl for any length of time."

Opening lead — Jack of clubs.

Declarer often encounters a situation where it is more dangerous to have one defender on lead than the other, and must take steps to avoid its occurrence. Here is an unusual case where South applied the principle twice in one hand.

West led the jack of clubs and declarer made his first good play when he followed low from dummy and low from his hand. South had realized that he might lose a trump trick (if he misguessed the trump situation) and also a club trick, and that it was therefore imperative to arrange the play so as not to lose two spade tricks also.

South also realized that he could cope with the spade danger by keeping East out of the lead and thus prevent East from ever leading a spade through the king. If he could do that, South could eventually discard two spades on dummy's diamonds.

It was for this reason that declarer did not play the queen of clubs from dummy at trick one. The double duck of West's jack eliminated all chance of East ever getting the lead in clubs.

West led another club, won with the ace, and South now pursued his overall plan by leading a trump to the king and finessing the ten on the way back.

When the finesse succeeded, South easily scored eleven tricks. But note that South would have been on equally firm ground had the trump finesse lost to West's doubleton queen. In that case, declarer would have scored only ten tricks, but would have fulfilled his number one assignment — making the contract.

In tackling the trumps as he did, declarer was not so much interested in guessing the location of the queen as he was in making sure that if he lost a trump trick it would be to West, not East. With West on lead, the contract was certain.

SOLUTIONS THURSDAY

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Astrological Forecast for Thursday, November 15, 1979
By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be aware of legal implications, complications and restrictions. Defer to wishes, opinions of those close to you, including partner or mate. If patient, you succeed. Otherwise, you may be forced to retrace steps. Cancer, Capricorn natives play key roles.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Finish what you start—realize that many are observing and drawing conclusions concerning your capabilities. Look beyond the immediate—perceive potential and see picture as a whole. Aries, Libra and the number 9 figure prominently.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You get to heart of matters. You learn where you stand in emotional arena. Creativity and love dominate scenario. Answer to question is in affirmative. Leo, Aquarius individuals aid you in making fresh start.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Rebuild, reinforce, remove safety hazards. Apply lessons learned in recent past. Older family member needs and deserves reassurance from you. Investment which appears to be a losing proposition is due to pay dividends.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Accent on movement, trips, messages, calls involving relatives. Be versatile, display ability to be flexible. Gemini, Sagittarius individuals figure prominently. Accept social invitation. You are now capable of making valuable contacts.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): What you need is practically handed you on proverbial silver platter. Be mature enough to toss aside false pride. Accent on money, personal possessions and locating what had been lost or misplaced. Be willing to review and revise.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Aura of excitement exists; you create, discover and find "missing link." Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius persons figure prominently. Accent on change, travel, variety and ability to get point across in meaningful, graphic manner. Be independent, confident.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Accent on family secret. Be diplomatic, mature, willing to look behind scenes for answers. Give attention to one confined to home, hospital. Important domestic adjustment could be part of scenario. Money picture is brighter than you might suspect.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Pleasure principle is highlighted. Accent on hopes, wishes, successful business endeavor. Define terms, perfect techniques. Aura of romance chases lethargy. Pisces, Virgo and the number 7 figure prominently.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You can handle added responsibility. Know it and accept challenge. Promotion, authority and greater business opportunities crowd busy scenario. Another Capricorn and a Cancer native play key roles. Contact made in January can now pay dividends.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): What seems far away is actually within reach. Know it and plan accordingly. Emphasis on education, communication, publishing and travel. Aries, Libra persons are very much in picture. You tie loose ends and successfully complete assignment, project.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Area which had been shrouded in mystery will now receive benefit of greater light. You can aid one close to you who faces financial dilemma. Do so without becoming inextricably involved. Message will become crystal-clear.

IF NOVEMBER 15TH IS YOUR BIRTHDAY this is decision-making time. You need not carry burden which belongs to someone else. You have grand opportunity to make fresh start in December. Glow of love will be present. You are perceptive, "sexy" and compassionate. You are on road to recovery from recent emotional setback. Know it and be grateful. Choose happiness, reject intrigue.

Today we have a regular Magic Square: a sequence of consecutive positive numbers arranged in solid square formation so that each column, each row and each diagonal adds up to the same magic total.

That total happens to be just one hundred more than the number of numbers in the sequence.

What must the sequence be?

Viets launch offensive

BANGKOK (Reuter) — Vietnamese-led Cambodian forces have apparently begun a long-awaited dry season offensive against guerrillas of ousted Premier Pol Pot in eastern Cambodia, Thai military sources said today.

They said the offensive near the Thai border appeared to have begun Monday with the shelling of a Cambodian frontier area crowded with Khmer Rouge followers.

The five-hour barrage, with mortar shells raining near the Thai border, caused more than 5,000 Cambodians to flee across the border.

The offensive is expected to increase in intensity late this month or in early December as the monsoon-soaked jungle dries and becomes more accessible to Vietnamese heavy military vehicles.

Military intelligence declined to speculate on the strength of the offensive forces in areas bordering Thailand, but estimates have varied between three and eight divisions totaling up to 40,000.

The Thai military expects Vietnamese-led forces to make a two-pronged attack against remaining Khmer Rouge guerrillas operating out of mountain hideouts in western Battambang province.

The Thai government fears that at least another 250,000 Cambodians could flee to Thailand if the fighting continues.

Hanoi has reassured Thailand that its forces would not intrude on Thai territory. The Thai armed forces said they were prepared to cope with any spillover from the fighting.

A five-member United Nationa fact-finding team arrived in Bangkok today to assess the situation at the Thai-Cambodian border at the request of the Thai government.

The group will decide whether a permanent UN observer team should be posted along the frontier.

Canada benefit likely

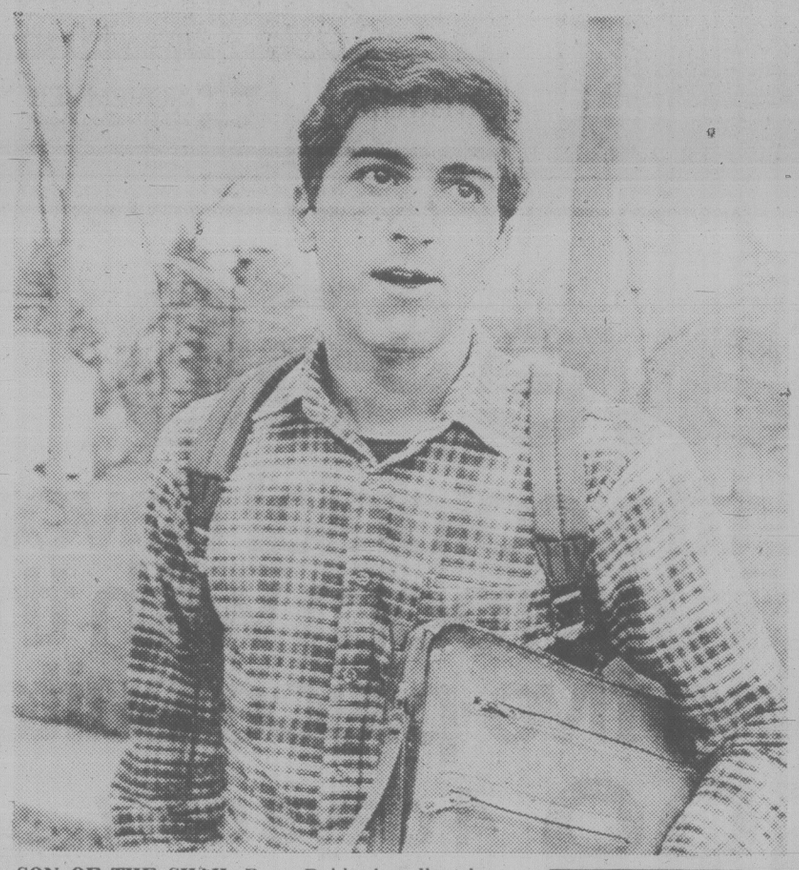
OTTAWA (CP) — Canada stands a good chance of benefitting commercially from bitter Iranian-American relations if this country "shows neutrality and impartiality," says S.M. Hashemi, an Iranian embassy spokesman.

Hashemi said in an interview today that if Canada offers to accept regular Iran Air flights at Mirabel, thousands of passengers would pass through Montreal bringing business opportunities with them. Iran Air's daily flights to New York have been suspended because union members refuse to handle the airline's baggage.

Hashemi and other Iranian diplomats here are in the midst of a dawn-to-dusk daily fast to support the militant Iranian students who seized 100 hostages — including 60 Americans — at the American embassy in Tehran.

The fast began Monday and ends Friday.

Hashemi denied reports that the embassy is closed this week during the hostage crisis in Tehran.



SON OF THE SHAH, Reza Pahlavi walks along a campus path at Williams College in Williamstown, Mass., where he is a student, while his ailing father is treated for a tumor in a New York City hospital and militant Moslem students in Tehran refuse to compromise on their plan to exchange American hostages for the Shah.

Stowaway cat travels world in 747's hold

LONDON (AP) — Lucky, a Siamese cat who earned her name, is recovering at London's Heathrow airport after being trapped for 32 days in the cargo hold of a jumbo jet.

Lucky somehow became separated from her box during a Pan American flight from Guam to Miami on Oct. 9, airport authorities said.

The plane, a Boeing 747, continued its odyssey around the world with the cat unnoticed in the hold. Discovered after the plane landed in London on Saturday, Lucky had nearly starved to death. Authorities said an injured hind leg would have to be amputated.

Upheavals in Iran troubling economy

By HENRY S. BRADSHER
Washington Star Service

WASHINGTON — Amid the religious and nationalistic fervor in Iran, the economy there has been slowly collapsing.

The country is deeply troubled not only by unemployment, agricultural shortages and industrial stoppages but also by severe regional strains. Several minority areas are restive under the Shiite Moslem leadership of the Persian majority headed by the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, raising the possibility that the country could split into pieces.

But Iranian leaders are speaking daily on Tehran radio about defying any foreign economic pressure against them or other efforts to deter them from a course that includes holding American hostages for the return of former shah, Mohammed Reza Pahlavi.

The announcement that they would cut off oil sales to the United States, which came shortly after President Carter announced he would halt purchases of Iranian oil for delivery here, was part of that defiance.

Two other reports from Tehran showed the depth of Iran's troubles.

Hundreds of unemployed persons who had been promised some relief by Monday, but failed to get it, stormed the Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs. Brushing by revolutionary guards who fired their rifles into the air, they occupied the building. "We want work, we want work," they chanted.

In the northwestern part of Iran inhabited by Kurds, a sizable new attack was made Monday on a government stronghold. The Kurdish minority has been most militant in seeking autonomy, but their guerrilla war against Tehran had recently subsided only to flare up again.

Demonstrations by Iranians seeking jobs have been common in Tehran's streets since June. Now, a year after the beginning of agitation to oust the shah had started disrupting the economy, the unemployment problem has intensified and so has public unrest.

Some 25 percent or more of Iran's labor force of 11 million is estimated to be out of work, and underemployment is widespread. The largest urban employer of unskilled migrants from overcrowded and impoverished villages, the construction industry, is moribund as investment has been scared off. Factories are running at only 50 percent of capacity or less because of a disruption of supplies.

Teacher denies spy charge

MONTREAL (CP) — A Laval university economics professor, being investigated by the RCMP, denied Tuesday that he ever passed any secret or classified information to the Soviet Union.

But Prof. Hugh George Hambleton said he did provide publicly-available political and economic data to "some Russians."

"I have seen some Russians at some places along the line," he said in a telephone interview from his Quebec City office.

He acknowledged the RCMP had launched an investigation into his past contacts, saying he had been questioned at length on several occasions within the last week, and some his bank documents had been seized.

Hambleton, 57, who has been at Laval University since 1964, gave a vague description of his contacts with persons he would only identify as "Russians," or persons whom he believed were acting on behalf of the Soviet Union.

Hambleton's name was mentioned in the House of Commons Monday by Conservative MP Tom Cossitt, who asked about his relations with a "Russian citizen Lijana Galeva" living in New York City. Solicitor-General Allan Lawrence refused to answer Cossitt's questions.

In his interview Tuesday, Hambleton denied a report in the New York Post that Galeva had recruited him as one member of a ring one of 30 to 50 spies in Canada. He also denied that Galeva had paid him $31,000.

Hambleton described Galeva as a Yugoslavian citizen and his "girlfriend," a former student at the University of Belgrade to whom he had lent several thousand dollars in Rome. He said he was helping to bail her out of financial difficulties at the time, and refused to discuss the nature of their relationship.

As a Yugoslav, he added, "she rather dislikes Russians."

He refused to discuss any other persons who might be the subject of the RCMP investigation, saying only that the force had treated him very fairly.

The RCMP has confirmed only that it is investigating a suspected violation of the Official Secrets Act in Quebec. Spokesmen for the force will not give details, and they say it would be premature for them to release any names.

Hambleton said that over a period of years, starting in the early 1960s when he was studying in Europe, he met with certain persons on a "very on-and-off basis." Some meetings took the form of conversations over dinner, and some were "semi-surreptitious meetings."

"The Russians are always rather secretive about the way they do things," he said. "One sort of has to go along."

Hambleton said he was trying to help the persons he talked to with "political and economic analyses" of a number of countries in South America and the Middle East. None of the information concerned Canada.

"One thing I am sure of is that I haven't passed over secret documents," he said, adding that the police would have "quite a job" ever proving that he did.

Asked directly whether he felt he was spying for the Soviets, Hambleton replied: "I don't personally feel I was, but that's for a judge to determine."

Hambleton, who has lived and worked in many countries, said many of the meetings in question took place in Haiti, Peru, Mexico, France and Spain. Only a few took place in Canada.

Bell to charge for local calls?

TORONTO (CP) — Bell Canada is seeking federal approval for experiments in billing users in its Ontario and Quebec service areas on the basis of the number of calls made and the number of hours talked.

At present, Bell charges this way for long-distance calls, but people pay only a flat rate for local service. A city resident with a black phone pays $8.55 a month, no matter how many local calls he makes.

Bell spokesman David Orr said in an interview from Ottawa that — although application to the federal government has been made — the experiment is a long way off.

"Because of the cost we don't want to invest in it until we get word from the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission that they're agreeable to the idea," he said. The commission has Bell's application on file now.

He said he expected it would take until late 1981 or early 1982 simply to get equipment installed and an experiment started, with a year of use needed to collect results.

"We might even decide, after the experiment is over to forget the whole thing," he said.

"The idea would be to spread the charges for local service around more equitably, so that people who used the system would pay a fair share.

"Some people could quite conceivably come out with a smaller bill every month."

Orr said test cities — one in Ontario and one in Quebec — still have to be chosen.

Award-winning astronomy star rejects academia

By KATHY KERR

PETERBOROUGH, Ont. (CP) — Warren Morrison admits there are a few puzzled professors at Trent University wondering why he is working at Quaker Oats stacking boxes.

In 1978, Morrison won the Governor-General's Award for the university's top marks. This year he collected two top awards for discovering a nova, a star flaring brightly for a few weeks, during his routine sky observations as an amateur astronomer.

The head of the physics department at Trent, John Earnshaw, says Morrison could be a brilliant physicist.

But Morrison is doing what he wants to do, collecting his pay cheque at Quaker and spending his spare time observing the stars.

Last fall, on his uncle's farm in Cavan, Morrison looked into the sector of the sky he has been observing for some time with his 2¼-inch diameter telescope and found a bright new spot of light.

He says he's not sure if he's the first Canadian to find a nova, but the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada judged the discovery the most significant contribution by an amateur astronomer and gave him the Ken Chilton prize in May. He also recently picked up the Nova Award from the American Association of Variable Star Observers in Cambridge, Mass.

He says the decision to drop the academic future he seemed headed for is hard to put into words.

"I was getting tired of physics," he says.

Mountie's shot scares off bear

STEPHENVILLE, Nfld. (CP) — Two RCMP officers were rescued from a cliff near here after being stranded for a harrowing six hours and threatened by a large bear.

Cpl. Lindsay Fraser and Constable Wayne Turpin were patrolling the Dashwoods wildlife area about 15 kilometres south of Robinsons late Monday afternoon when an embankment gave way and Fraser dropped about four metres to a cliff-side ledge.

Cold water dripping over the edge of the embankment formed a pool on the ledge and Fraser was forced to stand in the water as Turpin tried vainly to find a way to get him up onto the embankment.

During the night, a large black bear approached Turpin, who had no firearm with him. Fraser fired a weapon into the air from the ledge below and the bear ran away.

Eventually, Turpin reached an RCMP patrol car from Stephenville with his radio and the air-sea rescue centre at Halifax ordered a helicopter to the area.

Before the judge

A 23-year-old Malaysian student was remanded for a further 14-day psychiatric examination following an appearance Tuesday in provincial court.

Kian Hock Koh first appeared before Judge Fred Green on Friday when he was charged with the attempted murder of 19-year-old Nancetta Lorraine Kobe outside her residence at 1635 Cook on Thursday night, and with possession of a firearm.

When Koh reappeared Tuesday afternoon, Lang told the court Koh was declared mentally fit to stand trial.

However, Lang and defence lawyer Gordon Macdonald both agreed to a further examination by a psychiatrist.

Green remanded Koh until Nov. 27 when Macdonald may elect Koh's trial method and apply for bail.

Roman Michael Pylypa, 18, of Burnaby, was jailed 10 days for stealing a purse at a disco early Friday morning.

Crown counsel Don Laughton said the incident occurred at Dancers' Teen Disco, 721 Fisgard.

Laughton said Pylypa was spotted taking a girl's purse to the men's room where he took $22 out of it. Pylypa was grabbed by an employee but escaped and was chased to his car. The employee wasn't able to hold Pylypa but noted the licence number and reported it to police.

Six hours later, Sidney RCMP arrested Pylypa in his vehicle at the B.C. Ferries' Swartz Bay terminal and he admitted the theft, turning over $13 to officers.

Duty legal aid lawyer James Main said Pylypa had his car towed away that evening and had to pay $16 to get it back, leaving him short of funds to get back to the Mainland. He said Pylypa only took $15 from the purse.

Laughton said Pylypa was convicted March 26 for robbery and was given a suspended sentence and placed on probation for a year. Main added that the incident was only a purse-snatching on a dare.

A 47-year-old man was fined $150 and given an absolute discharge after pleading guilty to two charges.

Court was informed the incident occurred Sept. 20 when Sooke RCMP were called to a domestic problem at Andreychuk's residence.

Officer learned that Andreychuk's 13-year-old daughter and a 17-year-old youth had arrived home about 7:85 p.m. from the girl's school and Andreychuk, who had been drinking, was in a rage because the youth had kept his daughter out nearly all night on a prior occasion and was forbidden to see her again.

The youth became concerned for his and the daughter's safety, retreated to his car with her and began driving away when Andreychuk picked up a short-handled axe and threw it through the rear window.

Laughton said that, in fairness, it was an emotionally-charged matter and that Andreychuk was otherwise described by RCMP as a good citizen.

When asked if the situation had resolved itself, Andreychuk replied that it had because his daughter wasn't seeing the youth any more.

Green imposed the fine on the assault charge and gave Andreychuk the discharge on the mischief charge.

A 28-year-old man who failed to attend one of the four nights of an impaired drivers' course was given a 21-day jail term.

Robert Stanley Taylor, no fixed address, pleaded guilty to breach of a probation order made May 7 this year by Judge Harold Alder.

Taylor was convicted of a drinking-driving offence and was fined $200, placed on 12 months probation and ordered to perform 100 hours of community service work as well as take the impaired drivers' course.

Laughton said Taylor was to take the course on May 5, 12, 19, and 26, but missed the third session.

Fined for drinking-driving offences were: Daniel Joseph Gonzales, 21, of 1315 Fisher in Cobble Hill, $500; Janet Roseanne Bolster, 34, of 1800 Keating Crossroad, $350; Gilbert Joseph Jimmy, 37, of Mill Bay, $250; and Jean Lillian Maves, 22, of 2530 Wark, $250.

Westcan, CNR sued over fire

Canadian National Railways and Westcan Terminals are being sued for damages of $2.5 million arising from the loss of 6,500 tons of pulp in the Ogden Point warehouse fire more than two years ago.

The claim is being made by ITT Rayonier Incorporated, Rayonier Canada (B.C.) Ltd. and Rayonier Canada Ltd., which charge the defendants were negligent in not ensuring storage facilities at Ogden Point were safe from fire.

Rayonier counsel James Lepp said at the opening of the B.C. Supreme Court action in Vancouver that it was open to Justice W.A. Essonis to find that both Westcan and CNR took it upon themselves to protect the pulp.

Lepp said the plaintiff will attempt to prove Westcan was negligent and the onus then will be on Westcan to prove its negligence did not cause the loss.

Marijuana trial next year

The trial of eight men accused of conspiracy to import 13½ tons of marijuana will not be held until well into next year, two years after their initial arrest.

This became clear in county court Tuesday when dates were being set for upcoming trials.

Reason for the delay is a series of prosecution and defence appeals arising from the trial of five other men accused in the same incident.

The five chose trial by judge and jury and it went ahead last April. The eight, however, chose trial by judge without a jury.

Defence counsel William Deverell told Judge Leslie Cashman it had been agreed to wait for the B.C. Court of Appeal decision on the trial of the five because there were difficult areas of the law about admissibility of evidence.

The transcript of the trial was almost ready but the Court of Appeal is clogged and cannot hear the case until March or April, he said.

Judge Cashman said there was no point in the men, all on bail, coming to court every month just to have a decision on a trial date adjourned so he put the matter over until May 6.

The men are: Robert Sherman Miller, 34, Gordon Barlow Tait, 33, and Frederick MacKintosh Tait, 36, all of North Vancouver; Terrence Gerard Trainor, 29, of Langley; Kevin Gerard Gushue, 27, of Surrey; Lino Colatosti, 37, also known as Allen Valenti, of Qualicum Beach; and Neil Maxwell Kennedy, 27, of Oshawa.

An eighth man, Melville Douglas Balfour, 32, of Lasqueti Island, has had his case put over to Dec. 11 to fix a trial date. It was expected that this will also be changed to May 6.

The men were arrested July 15, 1978. A combined police and armed forces operation found 439 bales of marijuana near Shelter Inlet, 32 kilometres northwest of Tofino.

Fuel-saving plug fails to spark interest

By AB KENT

For five years the federal government has been helping Victoria research scientist Dr. Reginald Clements develop a fuel-saving spark plug for gasoline enginemakers.

"But industry won't bite. I can't understand it," the University of Victoria physicist said.

To add to his frustration, the Canadian Patent Development Corp. has told Clements and two collaborators from the University of Alberta that their device is not patentable.

But at the same time, an American company using their published research is trying to claim rights to the plug.

"It is one thing to study someone else's research results. It is quite something else to turn around and try to patent it in another country," Clements said.

With colleagues Dr. Peter Smy and Dr. J.D. Dale, who are at U of A in Edmonton, Clements has had five years of financing from the National Research Council, which apparently still believes the plug has merit.

Financing has been directed to basic research on a plug in which the ignition spark is a high temperature ionized plasma stream, with application to gasoline-burning internal combustion engines.

But that's not the sole possibility and lately their grants have come from a strategic fund.

The NRC recognises the possible usefulness of the jet igniter for diesel engines and foresees starting diesels easily in low temperatures.

Such a component has implications not only for long-term fuel economy in an energy-conscious world, but immediate benefits for outdoor industry, particularly oil exploration in the north.

The group is working at present on a $27,000 NRC strategic grant and has been granted another $40,000 to continue research.

Low thermal conditions are available at U of A's experimental cold room where diesel starts have been achieved at -50 degrees F., which is about the lower limit of temperature in which humans can perform physical work.

In his UVic lab, Clements has been experimenting with different fuel-air mixtures, igniting them in a bomb chamber and recording temperature and pressure variations.

He said the idea is to achieve easy starting without departing too much from accepted standards of fuel-air ratio for diesels.

One of the problems has been to allow for continued running of an ice-cold engine after the initial start, which calls for some alteration in the fuel mixture.

The jet igniter relies on a large, high temperature plasma arc compared with the very short comparatively cold spark of a conventional spark plug.

But in addition to its super-hot jet, the device is connected to circuitry that senses conditions inside an engine's combustion chambers and automatically adjusting the fuel and ignition to meet requirements.

In a gasoline engine this could bring a saving of up to 10 per cent in fuel consumption, a fact which has interested both Ford Motor Co. and General Motors Corp.

Yet neither has so far wanted to enter into a development arrangement with the scientists.

Clements said GM telephoned him twice to talk about the new plug but that was as far as it went. Ford tried one in a 1977 Pinto, concluding the improvement was not dramatic enough to warrant the engine modifications that should follow.

Rehiring of Jack Kelly under study — Kempf

The main casualty in the Socred dirty tricks scandal, former caucus researcher Jack Kelly, stands a 50-50 chance of getting his old job back, according to caucus chairman Jack Kempf.

Kelly resigned as chief researcher for the Social Credit caucus soon after he was caught advocating the use of false signatures on letters to the editor and similar political dirty tricks.

Now he wants to go back to work for the caucus.

Kempf said Tuesday he is surprised but gives Kelly a 50-50 chance of success.

"A committee will be struck as has been done in the past for the hiring of researchers and it will certainly be up to that committee to decide whether his qualifications are the best of all the applications received," said Kempf.

"The scandal will not have any bearing on the application."

Kelly's former colleague Ellen Mackay, who last week successfully defied a caucus attempt to reprimand her, is maintaining her hard-nosed attitude on the question of co-operation with the police investigation into the dirty tricks scandal.

Her lawyer, Robert Gardner of Vancouver, has written a second letter to Attorney-General Garde Gardom complaining of possible improprieties in the investigation.

Gardner complains that Gardom rejected the suggestion of impropriety as "consummate nonsense" without even hearing the complaint and he advises the attorney-general: "My client has instructed me that she is still prepared to co-operate upon a proper assurance from yourself that this investigation will be conducted without any improprieties."

Gardom was not available for comment.

Speed limits won't change for time being

There will be no sudden and dramatic change in B.C. highway speed limits despite Highways Minister Alex Fraser's stated intention of increasing limits where possible.

Fraser has had several weeks to review the speed limits but says the review is nowhere near complete.

The minister said Tuesday it will be spring before he has a complete picture of which roads deserve higher speed limits.

Highway 16 from the Alberta border to Prince George is in excellent shape, Fraser said, and is due to have its limit boosted from 80 k/mh to 90 k/mh early in the new year.

Work is continuing on upgrading intersections along the Trans-Canada Highway east of Abbotsford.

At present, the freeway with its 100 k/mh limit ends at Abbotsford.

The highways minister estimates within two years it will be 100 k/mh all the way from Vancouver to the Agassiz turnoff east of Chilliwack.

Elderly woman burned

An 84-year-old woman is in fair condition in Victoria General Hospital with burns suffered to the back of her legs, in an unusual fire in Esquimalt Tuesday at 6 p.m.

Esquimalt fire officials said Janet May Moilliet was sitting in a wicker chair in front of her fireplace at her home at 945 Admirals when a spark flew out and set the chair and her clothing alight.

A spokesman said the woman ran outside, rolled on the grass, put out the flames and then returned to phone her son.

However, the spokesman said she dialled the wrong number. She explained to the unidentified person on the other end of the line there was a fire in her house and the person called the fire department.

The election . . . REGIONAL

By PAT DUFOUR

All Capital Regional Board members from the electoral areas are being challenged in Saturday's election.

Several of the newcomers, dissatisfied with the board's performance, are demanding change. Others want local decisions made closer to home.

There are 16 hats in the ring for seven vacant seats. The city and municipalities appoint members to the board.

The festering fight over the fate of the Highlands has helped produced new challengers, particularly for the Langford director's seat.

Heinrich wants a change from "higher taxes, less services, uninformed public hearings, selective zonings and useless bylaws."

Rainey, persisent opponent of the controversial 45-acre freeze in the Highlands, says she agrees with the regional district concept but that the CRD has become too unwieldy. She wants a better public transit system in the Western Community, a freeze on all sewer outfalls and more clout for electoral areas.

Lubick, 37, has been a director for two years and the alternate director before that. He sees no great issues other than the need for "common sense and good judgment." He stands on his record which includes support of the Helmcken Road hospital, a tourist booth in the Western Community, the proposed $1.5 million St. Anthony Medical and Professional Centre, a new plan for the Highlands and opposition to relocation of the oil tank farms at Fort Rodd Hill.

There is also a three-way fight for the Outer Gulf Islands seat, now held by Saturna Island farmer Jim Campbell, veteran board member and former chairman.

Campbell says experience is crucial now that Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm is studying options for regional government. Campbell was chairman when the CRD presented its position to the provincial government's Regional District Review Committee.

He claims the municipal affairs ministry is dragging its feet on some of the recommendations brought forward by its own committee.

Campbell also stands for organized development of the Western Community and preservation of agricultural land on the Saanich Peninsula.

One of Campbell's challengers is Mayne Island innkeeper Weldon Pinchin, who describes himself as a "compromise candidate," committed to preserving the Gulf Islands lifestyle. He predicts increased government pressure in the next two years.

Retired army captain Vernon Roddick, who lives on South Pender, wants "more democratic representation" for the Outer Gulf Islands. He says residents should only pay taxes for services available on the islands.

Salt Spring Island director Mike Clement says most people living in unorganized areas "feel burdened down by all the government agencies which regulate their doings and want their government to be close to home and more responsive."

Clement says he favors Vander Zalm's proposal to modify regional districts and create a county system because it would result in better planning for rural areas.

He is being challenged by housewife Yvette Valcourt who wants decisions affecting Salt Spring made by island residents.

Valcourt says CRD officials should be told they are paid to serve people and "not to become masters or dictators and, least of all, patronizers."

Veteran board member Charles Perkins, seeking another two-year term as Sooke director, says there is an apprenticeship in government that must be served.

"The first concern in the next year will be the search for light industrial development. Sooke will not work as a bedroom community in a time of increasing gasoline and transportation costs," he says. "We are looking for marine-related industries and those which process forest products, including logging and milling wastes."

Hotelman Donald William Rittaler is also seeking the Sooke seat. He says too many major decisions affecting Sooke and Port Renfrew are made in Victoria. He wants a closer liaison with the Sooke Forum Council and the Sooke Community Plan and bylaws reviewed "with a view to gearing them to the needs of Sooke rather than what Victoria thinks Sooke should be."

Retired fire chief Al Beasley is running for another two-year term as View Royal director. He says his priorities are completion of the sewer project at a reasonable cost for all taxpayers, controlled development that conforms to View Royal's community plan and completion of parks for recreation use.

Running against Beasley, Anthony Miller, also retired, says development in View Royal should be in line with the community plan and residents' wishes, rather than those of developers.

Miller says keeping people informed is a recognized problem but can be done through regular public statements and the co-operation of newspapers.

Howard Drummond, Colwood director for the past four years, is seeking re-election. His priorities are the final adoption of Colwood's community plan, upgrading of public transit in the Western Community, development of more community parks and recreation facilities and the solution to some of Colwood's road, development and planning problems.

He is being challenged by Robert Warren Saunders, whose main objective is the abolition of regional district goverment, which he "considers to be an unnecessary bureaucracy in our midst." He says it is unlikely regional government will be abolished so the best hope for change is to reduce the power of regional boards.

Civil servant Mac Tipton has been Metchosin's regional director for four years and is seeking another term. He says regional districts need a more specific definition of their role from the municipal affairs ministry. He doesn't believe the regional district needs a lot of new functions.

Other priorities are public transit, a review of the regional plan and economic developmemt.

Running against him is Vic Josephson, who describes himself as an inventor. He says CRD planners should be made accountable for their indiscriminate planning.

Four rescued

Four unidentified Prince Rupert men were rescued about 5:30 p.m. Tuesday by the Canadian Coast Guard vessel Alexander Mackenzie after their 40-foot fishboat Magestic Warrior ran aground in Kelp Pass, 30 kilometres south of Prince Rupert.

The Mackenzie towed the boat ashore and the men were taken to Prince Rupert for treatment of exposure.

JCB backhoe loaders work like money machines

The JCB backhoe loader can do just about any job you want it to - and do it well. Owners call it the 'money machine' because it will pay for itself in no time. It's one of the most versatile construction machines available.

You name it, JCB can do it. It digs, loads, backfills, dozes, rips, lifts - even has a self-contained roadbreaker. Thanks to the widest range of attachments and options in the industry, the JCB backhoe loader doesn't know when to quit.

Standard production features include high-capacity front bucket; two-position dipper; independent stabilizers; and outstanding operator comfort and convenience in a full-vision cab. JCB's unique 'hydraslide' sideshift lets you position the backhoe precisely across the rear frame so you can dig up close against walls, curbs and fences.

Add JCB's versatility to its heavy duty components and rugged integral steel frame that's built to absorb the stresses usually placed on engine and transmission, and you've got a backhoe loader that really means business. Profitable business.

Call your Finning sales representative today and ask to see the JCB money machine. It's a sound investment.

PROPOSED 1979 CAPITAL WORKS
REFERENDUM—ROAD CONSTRUCTION AND IMPROVEMENTS

On Saturday, November 17th, residents of the Municipality of Saanich will be asked to vote on a Capital Works Referendum. The amount of the proposed borrowing is $2,565,000.00 for road construction and improvements.

The total estimated cost for these improvements and new construction is $4,370,000.00 with the senior governments contributing $1,805,000.00. The amortized annual or 1.148 mills, subject to interest rates at the time of borrowing.

N.B. The Municipality will not proceed with any of the projects unless grants have been received. Provincial Legislation, under the Revenue Sharing Act, provides grants of 50% of capital road construction. The referendum is intended to provide funds for the Municipality to take advantage of this program.
The effect on the average taxpayer will be $10.00 to $20.00 per year for 20 years. Information on any of the projects may be obtained by phoning number 386-2241, local 348.

Charities gambling rip-off

EDMONTON (CP) — Alberta's chief inspector of gaming control is quoted in leaked documents as saying provincial charities "are getting ripped off" and Attorney-General Neil Crawford says he expects there will always be potential for crime when charities collect money through gambling events.

But Crawford told reporters that gaming officials investigate any incidents involving missing funds and tell law enforcement officials if the investigation uncovers any criminal action. He said people have been prosecuted for misappropriation.

The attorney-general was less clear about efforts to prevent loss of money and about government policy on how licences for gaming events are awarded. Charity gambling events did $130 million worth of business in Alberta last year.

The statements followed the release by the CBC of minutes and draft reports prepared by a citizens' advisory committee on gaming set up earlier this year after community groups around the province protested stricter regulations proposed by former attorney-general Jim Foster. The committe said the controls could remove a major source of income for many organizations.

A document the CBC identified as minutes of a citizens' committee meeting Aug. 16 showed Ron Sheppard, the province's chief gaming inspector, saying: "Yes, the charities are getting ripped off."

The document quotes him as saying sales of pull-tickets at bingos are the major problem.

Market woes with sheep

SASKATOON (CP) — The common problem for Saskatchewan sheep producers is getting their product into the marketing system, says George Tosh, one of the province's largest sheep operators.

Tosh is chairman of the board of directors of the Saskatchewan Sheep and Wool Marketing Commission and the Sheep Industry Development and Extension Centre. He said he is constantly frustrated with the absence of a marketing system for lamb in Saskatchewan.

Tosh, who has 800 sheep on his Harris, Sask., farm, said it is difficult to estimate how many producers and sheep there are in the province because half the animals market are sold at the farm gate.

"The consumer has no other way to get lamb," he said.

Tosh said producers plan to make a presentation to Intercontinental Packers in early 1980 in an attempt to convince the company there are enough sheep in the province to justify involvement in slaughter and distribution.

"The situation is ridiculous now as most of our animals go to Toronto and that means huge transportation costs," he said.

Misuse of food a real wrencher

In today's world there are few news events that still generate public outrage as much as the misuse of food.

It happened when Quebec farmers hung slaughtered veal calves from front end loaders to protest low prices. It happened when milk was poured down Ottawa sewers. It happened again when a television newscast showed footage of rotting grain piles in Alberta immediately following a clip on the almost hopeless plight of starving refugees in Cambodia.

The misuse of food in a world where people are starving wrenches at man's basic instincts. Wars have been fought over food and U.N. statistics show that about two-thirds of the world's population does not have enough to eat.

Showing footage of rotting barley can't help the refugees in Cambodia, but it does help, even if temporarily, to fan the flames of public outrage.

Under western Canada's quota system, elevator agents are barred from accepting surplus grain even when storage space is available.

In the Stavely incident, local farmers began a year ago to deliver more than their allotted quota as prescribed by the Canadian Wheat Board.

The elevator manager's efforts to save the grain resulted in his being charged along with 56 farmers under the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

Even more serious, the $200,000 worth of barley involved has been held by the wheat board since 1978 and will be held until a Nov. 27 court appearance by the Stavely farmers.

If found guilty, the farmers could be heavily fined.

Western farmers argue that if the wheat board provides an adequate transportation and marketing system they could easily double or triple their output of food grains and the restrictive quota system could be eliminated.

They feel the public's outrage should be directed more towards what they believe are the real waste and impediments to our food producers — a grain transportation system that restricts food production; the 20 per cent of food lost or wasted before it reaches the consumer; cartels that threaten to turn off fuel to North America's food machine, and world leaders who condone genocide through starvation.

Grain elevator deal may go to court

MOOSE JAW (CP) — A local farmers' group has decided to seek legal advice in an attempt to hold the federal government to an agreement reached last spring to sell a grain elevator in Moose Jaw to the group.

The farmers got together and formed Moose Jaw Elevator company and submitted the only bid for the elevator when tenders were called. Their bid was $100,000 and the federal government agreed to sell the 5.5-million bushel structure.

But when the Progressive Conservatives took power they studied the situation, held talks with the group and then said last month it was going to reopen tenders because it didn't think the group had the finances to operate the elevator.

"We don't believe the government is within its rights to re-tender," said Don Jaques, co-ordinator for the farmers' group. "We made a deal with the government and feel they should go through with it."

When the group made its bid it assumed a licence to operate would be automatic but found it would require a $1.1 million bond. The farmers wanted to try to raise the funds but the government said it would not allow the time.

"We feel the government has shut us off without giving us adequate time to take over the terminal," said Jaques.

The farmers will seek legal advice to see if it can force the government to give them the time necessary to raise the money. The government has said if it doesn't sell the elevator by March 31, 1980, it will shut it down.

At home on the ice!

THE ICE RADIAL from GOODYEAR

$66.95 each, installed P185 75R-13 (replaces BR78-13)

Traction on ice without studs—and more!

The F32 All-Winter Radial is the tire that Goodyear built to take on the ravages of winter and get you through safely. It performs so well that we call it "The Ice Radial".

Why does this Ice Radial perform so well on icy roads? The secret is in the special rubber compound that stays "bendable" – even at below freezing temperatures – to conform to icy road surfaces.

Tourist boost for Manitoba

WINNIPEG (CP) — A meeting of tour operators from around the world is going to give Manitoba's tourist industry a shot in the arm, government and private sector spokesmen said Tuesday.

"This will be a first-hand opportunity for us to show off Manitoba's attractions, facilities and tourism know-how," said Tourism Minister Norma Price in announcing that Rendez-vous Canada would be held in Winnipeg next May.

Mrs. Price said the show did $20 million worth of business in Vancouver when it began in 1977 and last year in Toronto recorded $37 million in business.

Sales volume for the 1979 show in Montreal in September has been estimated at $40 million, she told a news conference.

Levine said it's important to show delegates that Winnipeg and the province have many things to offer.

"It's our future that we're talking about," he said.

The show is sponsored by the federal, provincial and municipal governments, with private sector aid, and is open only to representatives selected by the federal government.

Buyers from the United Kingdom, Denmark, the Netherlands, France, West Germany, Switzerland, United States, Japan, Australia and New Zealand attended the Montreal show.

Post office won't pay parking tags, mail delayed

CALGARY (CP) — A post office decision to stop paying for parking tickets issued to postal trucks is delaying mail deliveries and pickups in the city's downtown area.

"Our drivers have to spend a lot of time hunting for a legal parking spot and walking around downtown streets," Don Kenny, president of Letter Carriers local 14, said.

"Yes, it's impeding our service in the downtown area," acknowledged Patricia Dickson, public affairs officer for the post office.

She said that until a month ago the post office paid all parking tickets issued by police to postal trucks parked illegally in non-stopping zones, bus zones and restricted lanes while drivers made pickups or deliveries.

"But the bill for parking tickets ran too high." A directive was issued that drivers would have to find legal parking spots or pay the parking fines themselves.

Ms. Dickson said the post office has provided city police with a downtown map showing the locations of all mail boxes and mailrooms "and we have asked them for parking suggestions so we can speed up our service." So far, the police have made no suggestions.

Kenny estimated that about 2,000 parcels destined for city customers have already piled up because drivers must walk longer distances.

Ms. Dickson said that despite the slower service about 5,000 parcels a day are still being delivered throughout the city.

Reverend Duncan Wilkie will conduct the funeral service at Simmons and McBride Memorial Funeral Centre, Broadway at Maple Street, on Thursday, November 15, at 10 a.m. Flowers or a donation to the Children's Hospital would be welcomed by the family. His loving support and affection will be greatly missed.

THURMAN — T. Howard of Victoria, formerly of Nelson, B.C. Passed away November 12, 1979. Aged 76 years. Survived by his loving wife Constance; one brother W. E. Thurman; nephew William of Regina; one niece Doreen McKay of New Westminster.

Private family service will be held Thursday, November 15, at 11 A.M. in First Memorial Chapel, 4725 Falaise Drive. In lieu of flowers, donations to the Canadian Cancer Society would be appreciated. Arrangements through the Memorial Society of B.C. and First Memorial Services Ltd.

308 CARDS OF THANKS

We wish to express our sincere thanks to our relatives and friends for their kind messages of condolence, flowers and sympathy cards on the passing of our dear mother, Hannah Woodhouse. Special thanks to Mr. & Mrs. F. Nunn, Mr. & Mrs. J. Densmore and Mr. & Mrs. I. Burn. Also to Dr. A. J. MacGregor, the management and staff of Glen Warren Private Hospital for their kindness and care during her illness, and to Reverend D. Foster, to the pallbearers and to the staff of McCall Bros. Funeral Home. Mr. & Mrs. Albert Woodhouse.

The Atkinson family wish to thank all our many friends and relatives for their kind expression of sympathy and lovely flowers in the loss of a dear wife and mother, Mrs. Annie Atkinson. Many thanks to Dr. R.B. Smith and James Bay Lodge for their kindness and care and to all who helped in so many ways. Glenford Atkinson and family.

We want to express our sincere appreciation to our many friends for the kindness, friendship and love extended to us at the loss of a loving husband and father, Ruth Dennison and family.

309 IN MEMORIAM

HAWES — In memory of Edward R. Hawes who died suddenly, Nov. 14, 1973 aged 27 years.
—Always remembered and loved, Mom and Bill, Muriel and Linc.

JONES - In loving memory of our dear daughter-in-law, Mrs. Audrey Jones, who passed away November 11, 1977.
Treasure her Lord,
In your garden of rest,
For here on earth,
She was one of the best.
Always remembered by Mum and Dad Magee

WARD-In loving memory of Elizabeth (Bessie) Ward. Passed away November 13th 1969. Your voice and your smile live with us all the while, wish you were here again.
Fondly remembered,
Harry.

THEY SHALL GROW NOT OLD AS WE WHO ARE LEFT GROW OLD, AGE SHALL NOT WEARY THEM, NOR THE YEARS CONDEMN, AT THE GOING DOWN OF THE SUN, AND IN THE MORNING, WE WILL REMEMBER THEM.
WITH GRATITUDE, SANDS

Artichokes sturdy, tasty

The tuberous rooted artichoke has become quite popular in the last few years locally as gardeners begin to realize its nutritional value, and its ease of culture.

The plant is not related to the green bud artichoke which has its own devotees, and is more exacting in its growing requirements.

Of passing interest perhaps is the fact that one plant of the green bud type grew for years in a corner square of neglacted soil at the southwest corner of Douglas Street where the first small store of Woodward's Limited in Victoria was later erected.

Jerusalem Artichoke, however, is a sturdy North American species of sunflower. Its name is Helianthus tuberosus. Unlike the familiar sunflower with 12-inch diameter flat heads of seeds, the artichoke does not often flower in gardens.

In America on the trail from the eastern states to California it was found flourishing in the wild, and the west bound migrants discovered the tuberous roots sustaining for themselves and their horses. The seeds from the small flowers were relished by their chickens.

One of the great discoveries about the artichoke tubers was their lack of starch. Their fancied similarity to potatoes was thus exploded. Complete nutrient values are not listed, though one writer states the vitamin B complex is well represented and the tubers are easily digestible. They are indeed a pleasant food with a delicate flavor quite distinct from other vegetables.

Just at this time in November the eight to 10-foot stems of rough dark leaves turn brown overnight when touched by two degrees of frost. Ours turned brown a few days ago.

When growing in a row, the stems should now be cut down to about six inches above soil level; there is no further use for the leaves in manufacturing nutrients.

However their usefulness is not over, for the stems with their dried leaves are now to be laid along the row over the tubers which remain in the ground. There is always enough to afford protection to the tubers from future ground frosts. At the same time, the soil is more easily dug into for lifting another clutch of artichokes for a couple meals even though surrounding soil may be hard to dig.

The usual way in this climate is to lift one root with its cluster of tubers, to use within a few days. Artichoke tubers do not store safely like potatoes. They need to be cool and have a certain amount of dampness. The tubers lose nothing of their freshness when kept for three days in a plastic bag in the refrigerator vegetable bin. I wash off the mud, but leave the final scrubbing to just before cooking.

The artichokes can be enjoyed on a twice a week basis as a beginning, though there are many methods of cooking these vegetables. Or, they can be grated for use uncooked in salad with chives, sweet green cabbage leaves or other fresh greens. They may also be boiled, fried, or made into soup or fritters.

If accustomed to Chinese wok cooking, use the artichoke tubers in place of Chinese chestnuts, and as stuffing with herbs for a variety of dishes.

By February, the end of the season comes for Jerusalem artichokes. They will be seen to begin producing more prominent knobs which will be growth shoots and are no longer good for eating.

Rail tanker hazard blasted

MOLINO, Fla. (AP) — Demolition experts who blasted nine derailed tank cars to prevent a runaway explosion said today the danger was apparently over. But they said federal officials would have to decide when 500 evacuated residents could return.

"It looks great," said Wayne Rutledge, who led the team that planted 163 kilograms of explosives late Tuesday.

The resulting blast sent a mushroom-shaped fireball 610 metres into the air that could be seen 32 kilometres from the Louisville & Nashville Railroad derailment.

Rutledge inspected the site this morning and said that although fires would likely continue all day, there was no longer a threat of explosions.

It was feared at first that one of the cars did not burn and still contained its dangerous cargo of liquid propane. But Rutledge said he found an end of that car had been blown away.

Rutledge and two other men from Jet Research Inc., an Arlington, Texas, demolition firm, set the explosive charges.

Radiant princess has gruelling day

By JUDY CREIGHTON

KINGSTON, Ont. (CP) — Princess Anne spent her first full day in Canada at Canadian Forces Base Kingston on Tuesday and on the way picked up a considerable communications and electronics knowledge.

After a morning of military pomp and ceremony at the rain-soaked 2,300-acre base, the 29-year-old Princess moved from one building to another listening intently to explanations about equipment used in training communications and electronics engineers.

Throughout the gruelling day, the first of six she will spend in this country including visits to Toronto, Owen Sound, Ont., and Ottawa, the Princess chatted easily with her hosts.

Major Nicholas Lawson, her private secretary, said in an interview that the Princess "really seemed to be enjoying herself," although to outsiders the base tour was of a highly-technical nature.

Wearing a lilac-hued coatdress and matching, veiled pillbox hat designed for her by Susan Small of London, England, the Princess was radiant against the grey skies as she arrived at the base to a 21-gun salute.

She inspected the guard of honor of the First Canadian Signals Regiment, laid a wreath at the Vimy Ridge Memorial as 600 children watched, and toured the base's communications museum.

At a luncheon of turkey a la king, broccoli spears, salad and Canadian white wine at the warrant officers-sergeants' mess, she was presented with a painting of the skyline of Kingston, the work of Kingston artist Trudy Doyle.

Undaunted by a steady drizzle and protected only by an umbrella, Princess Anne walked through mud to view outside displays including telephone pole climbing, line repairing and a look down a manhole where a trainee was splicing communication wire.

The highlight of the afternoon came when she pushed a button to transmit a personal message electronically to the men and women of the communication and electronics branches at Canadian Forces bases in Canada and overseas.

The text read, in part:

"This occasion has shown me that the communications and electronics branch consists of men and women who have good reason to be proud of their military heritage."

She signed it, Anne, colonel-in-chief.

She leaves Kingston today for Toronto where she will participate in functions related to the Save the Children Fund of which she is president.

The Princess celebrates her sixth wedding anniversary today and later this week celebrates the birthday of her son, Peter, 2. Her husband, Capt. Mark Phillips, did not accompany the princess.

Lethal cylinder safely blasted

KINGSTON, Ont. (CP) — Chemical experts today safely exploded a cylinder of lethal hydrocyanic acid that had been sitting like a time bomb in the basement of Queen's University for more than a decade.

The explosion of the chemical — discovered last week by university officials — sent a 30-foot fireball into the air, shattered or shook windows 30 yards away and sent lethal gas vapors spewing upward.

The explosion was set to dispose of the chemical.

The 45-pound cylinder was moved delicately out of the basement and past several university buildings to a nearby pit, 2½-metres deep, where it was exploded.

Ray McManus, head of the three-man explosive team from the Jet Research Centre in Arlington, Tex., said the manufacturer has spent the last 12 years trying to track down supplies of the chemical.

A spokesman for American Cyanamic Co., which sold the chemical to the university 14 years ago, said his company has "tracked down all the chemical in the U.S. and almost all of it in Canada."

University officials did not know until late last week that the chemical becomes dangerous when it ages.

McManus, a 20-year veteran who specializes in oilfield demolition problems, said the explosion would have been equal to 20 pounds of TNT.

Electronic game sales outstripping supplies

TORONTO (CP) — Santa is going to disappoint a lot of children expecting electronic games this Christmas. There just aren't enough of them to go around.

Manufacturers aren't happy either. They say they could sell up to twice as many of their $25 to $50 games if they could produce them in sufficient volume.

The runaway success of the electronic sports, numbers and memory games has created a world shortage of microprocessor chips — the brainpower behind all the blipping and bleeping.

A United States trade publication has estimated sales of the games will go from $518 million in 1978 to $802 million this year and to $1.4 billion within five years.

Robertson said those figures could be divided by 10 to estimate the Canadian market.

Brian Clarke, president of Coleco (Canada) Ltd., said Christmas catalogue supplies will likely last longer than supplies in some stores.

"Certain games are virtually sold out now," Clarke said. "Probably a lot of shelves will be empty by the end of November."

Michael Haberman, vice-president of Consumers Distributing Co. Ltd., said his stores may not have as much of a shortage as others.

Last December the company placed large orders in anticipation of a substantially larger market this year, he said.

"We have tried to take a bullish position on these but we'll have to see how it works out."

Jonestown: Could it happen again?

By PIETER VAN BENNEKOM

Back in the United States, a few survivors of the biggest mass suicide ever recorded try to reshape their lives.

In Jonestown, 300 kilometres from the Guyanese capital, a Guyanan work crew tries to keep weeds from reclaiming the deserted jungle commune until the government decides what to do with it.

That's about all that's left of the Marxist political-religious cult founded by a preacher who eventually herded 913 of his followers into death, most of them willingly drinking poison.

Guyana has not yet started its investigation into the Jonestown massacre, but the U.S. Congress has completed its own probe, variously laying blame at the feet of the Guyana government, U.S. diplomatic representatives in Guyana or lax U.S. laws on registration and tax benefits for so-called religious groups.

One of the signs in deserted Jonestown bears George Santayana's philosophical dictum: "Those who do not remember the past are condemned to repeat it."

Hill sends followers in his so-called House of Israel sect, all Guyanese, into Georgetown streets to act as a strong-armed goon squad for the government of Prime Minister Forbes Burnham.

'God' in Guyana

The Peoples Temple had its origin in Indianapolis, Ind., where Jones found the first followers for his early preachings of Marxist socialism and racial equality.

In the early 1970s, Jones transplanted his followers to his first commune at Ukiah in northern California. In San Francisco, he became head of the local housing authority and dined with Rosalynn Carter one evening in 1976 when her husband Jimmy was on the campaign trail.

But Ukiah and San Francisco were too close to the mainstream of American life for Jones. To better control his followers, he needed to isolate them from homes and families. He found that isolation in the sparsely populated, multi-racial Guyana.

If Guyana hadn't existed, Jones would have had to create it. But the Guyana government already agreed with Jones on the issues of Marxism, communal living and racial equality — and shared his distrust of the U.S. government.

The Burnham government gave Jones a lease on more than 3,000 acres of virgin jungle land near the Venezuelan border. With the free labor of his fanatically dedicated followers and the money and possessions they brought to his sect, he hacked an almost self-sufficient community out of the jungle, eventually sustaining more than 1,000 people.

In the jungle, Jones seemed to grow progressively power-mad, giving in more and more to his two obsessions — death and sex. His rambling sermons dealt increasing on death. He made followers sign suicide notes and get up in front of the congregation to confess real or imagined "sins" such as homosexuality, bestiality, masturbation and fornication.

Punishment for one couple caught having sex without the permission of Jones' "relations committee" was to repeat the act in front of the commune's members.

Legal battle on

Jones permitted himself to have sex with both male and female members of his cult.

Because of the sect's isolation, defections were few, but Jones found them intolerable. He was especially upset when a defected couple tried to take a child he had adopted and said he had fathered.

Jonestown was full of people named Jones — adopted or natural sons, daughters, even granchildren.

An organization of "concerned relatives" contended their loved ones were being held by Jones against their will. Despite a public relations campaign and the support of the Guyana government, Jones was unable to refute the allegations. Five months before the demise of the sect, he sounded out the Soviet Embassy in Georgetown to see if the Russians would take him and his followers. The Russians declined to commit themselves.

Jones already felt "the world closing in on him," in the words of one American diplomat who saw him at regular intervals, when Rep. Leo J. Ryan of California took up the cause of the concerned relatives. The San Francisco Democrat mounted his own investigative mission to Guyana to determine whether Temple converts were being held against their will.

After a week during which Jones initially tried to bar Ryan and his party of reporters and relatives, the Temple leader finally relented and let the congressman in on Friday, Nov. 17.

When Ryan left the next day, 14 Temple members went with him. In one of the court cases still pending, it is alleged the 14 included a secret Jones agent with a pistol to make sure Ryan never made it back to civilization.

The departing Ryan party went to nearby Port Kaituma airstrip where two chartered planes waited for the flight back to Georgetown. Suddenly a flatbed truck pulled up, carrying some eight Temple fanatics. They gunned down Ryan, NBC newsman Don Harris, cameraman Bob Brown, San Francisco Examiner photographer Greg Robinson and defector Patricia Parks.

In the second plane the alleged "false defector," Larry Layton, still facing trial in Guyana for complicity in the murders, began firing his pistol, according to testimony given during preliminary hearings. His own bullets killed no one but wounded three persons.

Back at the jungle commune, Jones gathered his followers. A messenger brought the news of Ryan's death and Jones said, "It's too late now," urging his people to die "an honorable death" before the Guyanese army would arrive to "kill and torture" everyone.

"We all have to commit suicide," Jones said, according to one survivor, Odell Rhodes, who ran into the jungle to escape.

Jones ordered the preparation of a vat of grape-colored drink laced with cyanide, and said, "Bring the children first." Along with the children, who were force-fed with poison, most of the domestic animals also died.

Jones himself was found shot. It has not been determined whether he killed himself during the orgy of death, bizarrely recorded on a tape later found at the pavilion.

The American military flew the bodies to Dover Air Force Base in Delaware in plain caskets, many of them unmarked for lack of identification, in a massive operation that eventually cost more than $4 million.

Using a radio, Jones also had given the order to die to followers in Georgetown. The Temple's spokeswoman in the Guyanese capital, Sharon Amos, took a butcher knife and locked herself in the bathroom of the Temple's Georgetown home with her three children, an adopted granddaughter of Jones and the cult's illiterate shoemaker, Charles E. "Chuck" Beikman.

Only Beikman and 9-year-old Stephanie Jones came out of the bathroom alive and Beikman now is charged with all four murders and the attempted murder of Stephanie.

He and Layton have been committed at least once for a High Court jury trial after a series of bizarre and often-delayed preliminary proceedings. One delay resulted from a false "confession" by Jones' 19-year-old son Stephen, who wrote down Beikman's confession to police for him.

Mass suicide

If tried and convicted, both Layton and Beikman will be sentenced to hang. With the help of the U.S. Embassy in Georgetown to trace and locate survivors, the prosecution has been able to get some witnesses to return to Guyana to testify and now seems to be pressing for convictions.

Lawyers also are busy fighting over the sect's money in several suits, one filed by the Guyana government and another by eight survivors who want to be named the legitimate heirs to Jim Jones' fortune.

One year later it is still hard to comprehend how more than 900 people gave up their lives at the order of their leader.

A psychiatrist at the preliminary hearing into murder charges against Layton said he thought the macabre death ritual was the result of a collective trance.

"If someone would just have accidentally tipped over the vat of poison, the trance would have been broken and someone might have started a rebellion," he said. "But the vat didn't tip over and no one rebelled."

Fascination with Jones and his cult persists. Three books already have been published and more are in the works.

A movie about the massacre, filmed last spring in Mexico and starring Stuart Whitman as Jones, has been acquired for distribution in the U.S. and Canada by Universal Pictures. Sid Sheinberg, president of Universal, says the picture is being reedited "to put it in as good a shape as posible for American release" on a date to be decided by the end of this month.

Universe half as old as believed?

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Three astronomers say the discovery of a mistake in the way distances in space are measured means that the universe is only about half as old and half as big as previously thought.

The scientists who noticed the apparent error say the universe is nine billion years old, not 15 billion to 18 billion years, the usually accepted figures.

The discovery, which still must be verified by other scientists, could upset many theories about the age of stars and the evolution of the universe.

The new work was performed by one astronomer at Harvard and two in Arizona. They found a major error in Hubble's Constant, a yardstick that scientists use to figure out the distance between objects in space.

The researchers found that the constant, which is the ratio of speed to distance, should be almost twice as large as previously thought.

"If the Hubble Constant is about twice as big as it was thought to be in the past, that means that the age of the universe has dropped down to nine billion years," John Huchra, a staff member of the Harvard-Smithsonian Centre for Astrophysics, said in an interview Tuesday.

Besides being only half as old, he said, the universe is only half as big as previously thought.

"The distance to the furthest point in the universe is the velocity of light times the age of the universe," Huchra said. "Since we have now scaled down the age of the universe by a factor of two, that means that everything is half as distant."

Previously, scientists had believed that Hubble's Constant was 50 kilometers a second per million parsecs. A parsec is 3.26 light years. Now, Huchra says, the constant is 95 kilometers a second per million parsecs.

Astronomers believe that the stars and planets have been rushing outward ever since the "big bang," the giant primordial explosion that most scientists believe started the universe.

Huchra and his companions found that other astronomers erred by not taking into consideration a motion of the earth that is independent from its rush outward into space. This is the tendency of the earth to fall inward toward the centre of its supercluster of stars.

Geoge Field, head of the astrophysics centre, said: "There is going to be a lot of scrambling and trying to make sense of things if this result is correct. I think the first response of the scientific community will be to verify it and frankly to attack it."

He said some stars are believed to be as old as 15 billion years. "Now we run into the absurd situation that it appears the universe is younger than the stars."

India faces famine in severe drought

BY M.G. SRINATH

NEW DELHI, India (UPI) — The worst drought in 60 years could force India to eat through its entire food stockpile and face nationwide famine for the second time in six years, officials said Monday.

Reports of hunger and near-starvation were increasing across the nation of 550 million.

Officials reported many areas were without drinking water and cattle were on the verge of death in parched grasslands. In some districts, villagers were foraging for roots and pawning jewelry to buy food, according to reports reaching the government.

Much land had hardened into a dry, solid crust and fields lay unplowed, the reports said.

Total food reserves have been put at 19 million tons, but summer crop losses were estimated at nearly 12 million tons. The government hoped to bridge the gap with the winter crop but the rains still have not appeared and officials predicted a 7 million ton winter loss, effectively exhausting food reserves.

Worst drought

"I may sound alarmist, but this estimate is near the truth," said Bhanu Pratap Singh, federal Minister for State Rural Reconstruction.

Prime Minister Charan Singh said in a parliamentary debate the failure of the monsoon rains resulted in "the worst drought in 60 years."

Millions of people living mostly in the Bihar, Uttar Pradesh, Rajasthan, Maharashtra and Andhra Pradesh areas were reported leaving their villages for the cities. Newspapers said railroad stations in these areas were crowded with people fleeing the parched rural areas.

Charan Singh told officials last week, "If we are not able to arrest this exodus, the situation is likely to get out of control."

Indian leaders have avoided declaring any area "famine stricken," apparently because of political repercussions in elections scheduled in January.

No international relief has been sought yet, but 5 million tons of food have been allocated in a "work for food" program.

India's last drought was in 1974 when millions fled the north and central parts of the country and reports of hundreds dying came in from several areas

Food shortage prelude to economic disaster?

ROME (AP) — The developing Third World is moving toward a huge food shortage that possibly will result in "economic disaster" within the next 20 years, a United Nations report says.

Some 400 million people suffer from serious malnutrition, and "even if we make the most enormous efforts to increase food—and agricultural production," some 250 million still will be starving by the year 2000, Edouard Saouma, director-general of the UN Food and Agriculture Organization, says in a report prepared for the FAO conference that begins here Monday.

The FAO defines malnutrition as not receiving adequate calories to "carry out normal functions in daily lives."

The report predicts poor countries will become increasingly dependent on rich ones — particularly the United States. U.S. farmers already provide 57 per cent of world grain exports, it notes.

Developing countries are finding it harder to pay for food because they must spend more for oil, the report adds.

"Even with three times today's level of food aid, the cost of such imports would portend economic disaster" by the end of the century, it says.

Grain imports by developing countries have risen sharply in the last four years, the report continues, and could reach 80 million tons this year, compared with 51 million tons in 1975.

The FAO says poor countries must start to cultivate 500 million acres of land currently under-used or not farmed at all, and increase yields with more irrigation and fertilizers. This will be extremely expensive, it says, and rich countries should more than double their annual aid from the less than $5 billion now to $13 billion by the end of the 1980s.

During the two-week FAO meeting, the representatives from 146 countries also will consider programs to help developing countries catch more fish, aid peasants and wipe out sleeping sickness that kills livestock.

The conference will urge developing countries to invest more in farming to boost production, and will ask rich countries to lower trade barriers and increase imports from poor ones.

Viet war veterans suckers, says poll

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new public opinion poll says more than half the people in the United States believe that Vietnam war veterans were "suckers" for risking their lives in a useless war.

Moreover, only one American in five now thinks that sending U.S. troops to Vietnam was the right thing to have done, the poll shows.

Nearly two-thirds think getting involved in Vietnam was a mistake and the rest have no opinion.

VA Administrator Max Cleland says he takes comfort from a finding that suggests most people have favorable attitudes toward Vietnam veterans — no matter what they feel about the war.

To the question whether veterans of the war "were made suckers, having to risk their lives in the wrong war in the wrong place at the wrong time," 39 per cent agreed strongly and 24 per cent agreed "somewhat." So, over-all, 63 per cent of the public agreed.

Huge postal merger eyed

Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Two of the U.S. government's biggest — and certainly most powerful — unions are talking merger. That is, they are talking about talking about merger.

A linkup between the two AFL-CIO giants, the American Postal Workers Union and National Association of Letter Carriers, could give them a hammerlock on the nation's biggest, and one of its most vulnerable, communications networks.

The APWU represents most of the inside employees of the 600,000-member U.S. Postal Service. The Letter Carriers union has most of the outside employees of the USPS. Eight of every 10 employees eligible to belong to a union carry an APWU or NALC card.

In addition to the tentative merger feelers, representatives of the two postal unions have long-standing contacts with the Communications Workers of America. A linkup between those two and the CWA could give the new union the same clout the Teamsters enjoy on the highways.

But none of the union leaders expects to share an office in the near future with any of his fraternal rivals.

Although allies under the AFL-CIO banner when facing the common enemy — Postal Service management — the two unions are miles apart in many respects. Letter Carriers officials have long thought of their union as the shock troops, or Marines, of the federal labor movement. They have traditionally felt, in private, that the APWU — which has as many national officers as some locals have members — is top-heavy and spinning in too many directions because it represents different crafts.

The AWPU, which was created by a series of mergers of craft-oriented unions, traditionally has considered itself more democratic, and less subject to one-man rule than the Letter Carriers, who cherish a tradition of strong leaders.

The rivalry between the two big unions is nothing new. In fact, first-term Letter Carriers President Vincent Sombrotta and veteran APWU leader Emmet Andrews probably get along as well as any of their counterparts. Andrews survived a strong election challenge by militants who said they wanted a harder line against Postal Service, even if it meant a strike.

True to their militant tradition, the Letter Carriers ousted their incumbent president, who called for moderation, in favor of Sombrotto, who ran as the hardline, get-tough outsider.

The other problem to this or any other union — or corporate — merger is what to do with incumbent officers.

Brotherhood aside, being the national officer of a postal union is better than returning to a mail route, or letter-sorting machine in a post office. Merger would mean somebody would have to go, and both unions have young, ambitious officers here and in the field eager to get or hang onto top jobs.

Postal managers have mixed feelings about the prospect of dealing with one big union. It would mean a more powerful adversary, but some think a single major union — in addition to the influential Mail Handlers and Rural Letter Carriers — could make negotiations move quicker.

Whatever the benefits, or drawbacks, merger isn't in the cards anytime soon, no matter how many merger committees are formed and how many meetings are held.

"If you think the Camp David talks (between Egypt, Israel an the U.S.) were tough, imagine arranging a marriage between us," one of the union leaders said.

Building a better mouse?

LIVERMORE, Calif. (UPI) — Engineers at Lawrence Livermore Laboratory are attempting to design a better mousetrap. But nature might be designing a better mouse.

Three of four traps designed at Livermore utilize a teeter-totter or walk-the-plank design in which a mouse seeking bait gets dumped into a container of water where he drowns.

However, when the scientists showed off their traps for news reporters, a couple of mice proved too smart.

Sail-powered cargo ship is off

THOMASTON, Me. (AP) — A sail-powered cargo ship, the first to go into service in the U.S. for 40 years, has set sail on its maiden voyage off the coast of Maine after a rocky start.

The 30-metre-long John F. Leavitt ran aground in the St. George River and had to wait seven hours for the next high tide to clear the rocks and mud.

A small work boat had pushed the bow of the vessel out of its berth but the big wooden schooner became stuck when it missed its first guide marker before reaching the end of the river.

The trip to Quincy, Mass., where the Leavitt is picking up its first cargo of lumber and then head to Haiti, is not due to be completed until today at the earliest. The ship then sets sail for Haiti at a rate of about 160 kilometres a day.

"It's really a test run," Frances Yates, the wife of navigator Ned Ackerman, said in a telephone interview.

The voyage is the realization of a three-year-old dream that began when Ackerman decided he could beat the energy crisis with his totally sail-powered cargo schooner.

With Ackerman at the helm, the vessel also was carrying a five-member crew and a film crew preparing a documentary on the revival of the old coasting schooners.

The Leavitt has no engines on board, except for one used to haul cargo on and off the ship. But it carries a small workboat to help manoeuvre it around until the sails are raised.

With a cargo capacity of 150 tons, the Leavitt can carry the equivalent of five semi-trailer truckloads. Its two-metre draught guarantees accessability to shallow harbors and Ackerman says its lack of auxiliary power exempts it from most federal regulations.

Estimates of the Leavitt's price tag have ranged from $300,000 up but Ackerman, a former medieval scholar, refused to divulge the cost, calling it a "trade secret." Despite his savings in fuel, he says he is not sure whether his cargo business will be a money-maker until he has had a chance to try it out.

Boredom among youth called major cause of arson

By DEREK SIDENIUS

Boredom among young people is the major cause of a dramatic increase in arson fires in Canada, says a spokesman for the Canadian Association of Fire Chiefs.

Ron Horrocks says fires set by vandals now account for more than half of all arson fire losses each year.

"I'd put down the vandalism to boredom on the part of youth," Horrocks said in an interview Tuesday.

"Some youths feel alienated, some feel they have an axe to grind with society, but the bulk set fires for no other reason than they have nothing better to do."

Horrocks, who is chief of Halifax fire department and a vice-president of the association, said most of the fires are set by vandals without prior planning.

"I don't believe that when they set the fires they actually plan to cause the destruction that may result.

"I don't think they envisage the fire taking a whole building or killing people."

Horrocks is in Victoria to promote a national Arson Alarm program developed by the Insurance Crime Prevention Bureau and sponsored jointly by the fire chiefs' association and the Insurance Bureau of Canada.

He described arson as the fastest growing crime in Canada.

"Our message is simply to tell as many Canadians as possible that arson is not an isolated crime. It is being committed right in your own city, right in your own neighborhood," he said.

He noted that in the decade ending in 1975 there was an average of 2,900 arson fires in Canada each year resulting in $23.6 million in direct losses.

Since 1975 the annual average has soared to 9,000 fires for $125 million in direct losses and $500 million in indirect losses such as loss of jobs and revenues.

Of the 900 persons who die in fires each year, about 15 per cent or 135 die in fires that are deliberately set.

The ratio of arson to accidental fires ranges from one in four to one in seven cities across Canada and the nation has the second worst fire record in the world after the U.S.

Horrocks said the growth in arson may be due in part to the state of the economy.

"There are more people in trouble with mortgage payments these days and more businesses going sour," he said.

"The only way to get out from under is to burn down the house or business and collect the insurance."

Yet, Horrocks said, only about five per cent of the arsons are set for profit motives.

Fifty per cent are set by vandals, 15 per cent by persons for revenge or spite and 30 per cent by criminals to cover up other crimes such as breaking and entering or murder.

Pyromania is rare but when a pyromaniac gets going he generally does a lot of damage before he's caught, he said.

Horrocks said police and fire departments are spending millions of dollars trying to get a grip on the problem.

While sophisticated new tools have been developed to detect arsons, investigators are relying more and more on computers to help them in their investigations, Horrocks said.

By taking past cases, figuring out the factors involved, and feeding the information into computers, investigators are able to come up with profiles of buildings that are targets.

"Once you can isolate the targets then it becomes a matter of keeping a close watch on them."

Carter freezes Iran's assets

Iran's plan to withdraw $5B stymied

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — President Carter, declaring a national emergency to deal with the Iranian threat, today ordered a freeze of all Iranian assets in the United States, estimated at $5 billion.

The move came just a few hours after Iran disclosed it would withdraw its funds from U.S. banks.

(Related pictures, page 45).

It was the third major action Carter has taken against Iran in the rapidly escalating crisis. Carter has also ordered deportation proceedings against Iranian student-visa violators and a ban on Iranian oil imports.

The president's new order blocks all official Iranian assets in the U.S., including deposits in U.S. banks and in their foreign branches and subsidiaires.

The duel over Iranian assets upset financial markets, but the damage was limited.

Nervousness over escalation of the conflict between the U.S. and Iran caused the stock market to decline in early trading. The dollar fell in Europe when Iran announced its intention to withdraw deposits from U.S. banks, then recovered when President Carter froze Iranian government assets.

The purpose of the order, according to White House Press Secretary Jody Powell, is to ensure claims against Iran by the U.S. government and citizens are protected and provided for in an orderly way.

The executive order freezing all Iranian government property in the United States said:

"I, Jimmy Carter, President of the United States, find that the situation in Iran constitutes an unsual and extraordinary threat to the national security, foreign policy, and economy of the United States, and hereby declare a national emergency to deal with that threat.

"I hereby order blocked all property and interests in property of the government of Iran, its instrumentalities and controlled entities, and the Central Bank of Iran, which are, or become subject to, the jurisdiction of the United States or which are in, or come within, the possession or control of persons subject to the jurisdiction of the United States."

Although official estimates are that Iranian government entities have $5 billion on deposit, the revolutionary government of Iran says its reserves total approximately $12 billion and financial experts in Tehran reported about $8 billion to $9 billion was in U.S. banks.

The order does not affect the bank accounts of private persons but does apply to the government of Iran, the Central Bank of Iran and other controlled entities.

Lenko quits over 'tricks'

By JAKE BANKY

The executive assistant to Human Resources Minister Grace McCarthy has resigned in the aftermath of the dirty tricks scandal.

George Lenko, who organized the taping of a Socred seminar where dirty tricks were advocated and later admitted listening to the tapes, submitted his resignation today.

Lenko said his job was only to edit the tapes and said he takes full responsibility for the section on dirty tricks not being erased.

"For this lack of diligence, I apologize," Lenko said in a prepared statement.

He insisted there is no mystery and said allegations that other people are involved are untrue.

Lenko said he is quitting because he has been put in an "intolerable position.".

McCarthy told reporters Lenko has resigned because he feels the press does not believe him when he says his hands are clean.

"He will not live in a state of harrassment, being disbelieved, and therefore he has resigned," she said.

NDP leader Dave Barrett said Lenko's resignation raises more questions than it answers and further confuses the situation.

Earlier the Social Credit party's chief researcher Jack Kelly quit because of his involvement and another research worker, Ellen MacKay, refused to accept a 30-day suspension without pay for her part in the affair.

Meanwhile, reporters have been unable to interview Premier Bill Bennett's senior aide, Tony Tozer, concerning a possible secret party bank account in Victoria.

Tozer has admitted he authorized payment for the expenses of Kelly and Mackay at the Vancouver seminar where the tapes were made and that the money came out of the special account in Victoria.

However, party officials say they know nothing about such an account and the staff of Bennett's office say Tozer will not be available for a couple of days.

$4-a-barrel hike to tighten pinch on B.C.: Hewitt

By JAKE BANKY

Energy Minister Jim Hewitt says a proposed $4-a-barrel increase in the price of domestic oil next year will tighten the squeeze on B.C.'s already pinched economy.

Premier Bill Bennett is in California and Hewitt expects he will be in contact with Clark on his return next week.

Hewitt said on his return Tuesday from the federal-provincial energy conference in Ottawa, that a $4 increase — expected in 1980 — will mean an extra jump in the unemployment rate of 0.4 per cent, a decline in real output of 1.2 per cent and an increase in the inflation rate of approximately two per cent for B.C.

Hewitt said he believes the increase will come in two stages — a $1 increase in January and a $3 increase next July.

The minister also brought back a warning that the hike will by no means be a one-shot affair.

"We can expect domestic oil prices to rise by four dollars a barrel every year for the next three or four years," Hewitt predicted.

And even then he expects the Canadian price will still not match the world price at the time.

B.C. was one of the provinces which backed Clark's proposal to increase domestic oil prices. Only Ontario stood firmly opposed.

However Hewitt is not prepared to consider a similar increase in the domestic price of B.C.'s natural gas.

Oil and gas, he said, are two separate issues.

"We don't sell natural gas to eastern Canada — we use it domestically and we export it. We feel we can encourage the use of natural gas by controlling the domestic price in B.C.," said Hewitt.

By increasing our use of gas, he said, British Columbians can conserve oil.

The minister suggested Clark might consider using funds from his proposed energy development bank to help pay for a natural gas pipeline to Vancouver Island.

He also reiterated his intention to seek National Energy Board approval for an increase in the export price of natural gas to the world level — the $3.62½ per thousand cubic feet Mexico will be getting for its gas as of Jan. 1.

The current Canadian export price for gas is $3.45 per MCF.

Lougheed told the Alberta legislature Tuesday he will meet the prime minister but warned that Clark will have to clarify certain points before any agreement can be considered.

Of concern to Lougheed are conflicting statements out of Ottawa concerning the federal government's plan for a federal tax on oil company profits.

He said Alberta is prepared to accept the federal tax on increased oil company profits provided it is based only on profits and not on gross revenue from oil production.

Alberta, he said, should have first crack at the gross revenues through provincial royalties on production.

Lougheed said he will restate Alberta's position that it will not accept a federal tax on oil companies' revenue, a tax he said would be "even more reprehensible" than the former Liberal government's 1973 oil export tax.

Well-tuned car big fuel saver

OTTAWA (CP) — A car tune-up can improve fuel economy as much as 41 per cent and mean a saving of up to $500 a year, a test organized by the energy department and the Ottawa section of the Ontario Motor League shows.

Average fuel saving of 13 participants in the test was 24.5 per cent; that could mean a saving of between $125 and $300 a year.

Conservative MP Ken Binks (Ottawa West), who promoted the test Tuesday, said participants recorded mileage and fuel consumption for 10 days. Then they were lectured on energy-saving driving habits, had their cars tuned and kept driving records for another 10 days.

Binks said more than 1.3 billion gallons of gasoline per year could be saved across the country if all cars were tuned regularly and good driving habits practised.

The energy department's conservation branch did similar tests in Toronto and Quebec City with average savings of 12.9 per cent and 15.6 per cent respectively.

Branch spokesman Maurice Robichaud said the government is currently emphasizing home-heating conservation programs, but in the spring will turn its attention to saving energy in transportation. That campaign will include more tests.

Metric move delayed?

OTTAWA (CP) — The government will likely postpone the conversion to the metric system planned for Jan. 1, for grocery stores, farmers and food packing and processing plants, Small Business Minister Ron Huntington said Tuesday.

Huntington told Charles Mayer (PC — Portage-Marquette) in the Commons the public does not fully understand the new system of weights and measures and pressing ahead with the Jan. 1 start could stir up widespread hostility to it.

He told reporters later he didn't know when the conversion would begin, but the postponement doesn't mean the government is backing away from its commitment to metric.

Rich return for one man

MISSISSAUGA, Ont. (CP) — When Bernadino Pede was forced to evacuate his Mississauga home Sunday, he took very little with him. One thing he did take, however, was a ticket for the Wintario draw.

It was a good thing he did. He won $100,000 with it.

"They still don't believe it," Pede's daughter, Rosa, said of the lottery win.

She said the first thing her father took as he prepared to leave his home was the ticket and the excitement over winning with it still hasn't subsided.

Bar fishermen from pass — Ferries

By PAUL MINVIELLE

The B.C. Ferry Corporation has asked Transport Canada to close most of Active Pass to sports fishermen.

A three-page letter from ferries operations manager Peter de Cunha asking for the closure was submitted Tuesday to a Coast Guard hearing on Active Pass.

The letter said it is the unanimous opinion of ferry captains that unless specific action is taken to control small craft in the area, then accidents involving fatalities are to be expected.

However, sports fisherman Dick Collins, of Vancouver, told the hearing Active Pass is one of the few spectacular areas for experienced fishermen.

He reminded everyone that two inquiries into the grounding of the Alberni have exonerated sports fishermen and maintained that no accident had been caused by sports fishermen in the pass over the past 20 years.

"Why then are we, the sports fishermen, bearing the brunt of this enquiry?"

He proposed that sports fishermen be barred from the pass and its approaches during the peak ferry traffic months of June, July and August and be allowed to return after Labor Day.

Fraser opposed the possibility of the ferries abandoning Active Pass and sailing around the outside of the islands.

"I certainly oppose that," he said. "We're in this business to give a service and adding half an hour or 40 miniutes to the run to go around would definitely deteriorate that service."

Herb Buchanan, the regional director of the Canadian Coast Guard who chaired Tuesday night's meeting, told the session: "We're not here to lecture you, we're here to listen to you."

There is another public meeting on Mayne Island tonight and a final meeting in Vancouver on Thursday.

The meetings were called as a result of the grounding of the Queen of Alberni on Collinson Reef in Active Pass Aug. 9.

Les Obee, of Victoria, and Hud Graham, owner of Cedar Grove Marina at Swartz Bay, praised the fishing in the pass and said there is no reason for small craft to impede larger ships.

Collins said commercial trollers, underpowered sailboats, pleasure craft, gillnetters, underpowered tugs and freighters all contrribute to the congestion.

Buchanan read some of the proposed solutions that have been submitted.

—Cameras on the ferries' bows to photograph craft illegally impeding any ferries progress.

—Rescheduling ferry traffic.

—Large signs on nearby islands warning vessel operators of fines for disobeying the rules.

—A slow speed zone to protect people on the beaches, especially children, and prevent erosion.

Fort Nelson mill resumes loading of railway cars

FORT NELSON (CP) — Tackama Forest Products Ltd., which last week was forced to lay off about 210 workers because of a shortage of storage space, began loading veneer onto rail cars Tuesday morning.

Tackama and two other lumber mills have been stockpiling lumber since fire destroyed a B.C. Railway trestle near Fort. St. John 3½ weeks ago, cutting the only rail link to outside markets.

A bailey bridge near the confluence of the Peace and Pine Rivers was completed during the weekend, making it possible to truck freight across the Pine River.

Shipments of lumber and sulphur now will be taken from Fort Nelson to Fort St. John, where they will be loaded onto trucks and taken around the point of the fire to Teko, 20 kilometres to the south. There they will be re-loaded onto railcars and shipped south.

The lack of storage space for stockpiled lumber forced the Tackama operation to close down at the end of the afternoon shift Friday. The other two mills — Fort Nelson Industries Ltd. and Omenica Enterprise — did not follow suit.

Al Hume, Tackama general manager, said he hoped the workers could be back on the job in about three or four days.

"We had 13 cars available for loading today and there are 26 more on the tracks," he said. "I'd say that in the early part of next week, we'll be able to assess our inventory level."

The two other operations did not have to shut down because they are considerably smaller, produce random dimension lumber and do not have Tackama's storage problem.

Hugh Armstrong, B.C. Rail spokesman, said Tackama and Fort Nelson Industries have requested to ship 16 cars of lumber and 14 cars of veneer a day. Petrosul, a manufacturer of sulphur pellets, wants four cars a day to be shipped.

"We are doing everything possible to meet these requests," he said.

Meanwhile, representatives of the three mills will meet in Prince George today to discuss details of an agreement worked out Friday to solve the high cost of trucking lumber.

The provincial government has already agreed to reduce stumpage fees in an effort to reduce the burden of transporation costs on the mills. Other forms of aid are to be discussed at the meeting.

The trestle caught fire after 11 unattended tank cars containing fuel ran down an incline onto the trestle, derailed and exploded into flames.

Yves Tremblay, 20, a former railway employee, and Stanley Newdorf, 22, were later charged with mischief. Their cases are still before the courts.

Armstrong said work on the earthfill to restore the rail link is progessing.

About 320,000 cubic yards of fill have been taken to the site. A further 800,000 cubic yards will be needed to finish the project, which is expected to be completed by the end of the year.

Workers 'erred' in abuse case

Human Resources Minister Grace McCarthy admitted Tuesday an error in judgment was made two years ago when social workers decided not to remove children from a Richmond foster home after reports of child abuse.

Mrs. McCarthy said she has asked ministry officials for recommendations on how procedures can be improved to prevent a repeat occurrence.

The case involved a foster father who has since been convicted on three counts of indecent assault against three female children who were staying at the home.

Mrs. McCarthy said a case of alleged abuse came to the attention of authorities in 1977 but the social worker involved, after consultation with other professionals, decided to let the children stay in the home despite discplinary measures said to have been "excessive and inappropriate."

"Methods of discipline, treatment of the children and their approach to fostering were thoroughly discussed with the foster parents by the professionals involved," Mrs. McCarthy said.

"These children had been in this home for seven years and the home was considered a permanent replacement. For these reasons the children were not removed," Mrs. McCarthy said.

"In retrospect, however, I can say that this decision was an error in judgment."

She said action was taken as soon as it became apparent there was more to the situation than questionable disciplinary methods.

ACTRA dispute hobbles movie

VANCOUVER (CP) — A dispute between the Association for Canadian Television and Radio Artists and March Films Ltd., a Canadian film company set up for production of the feature film CeBe, could result in the loss of capital cost allowance deductions for Canadian investors who financed the $2.2-million film.

Association members set up an information picket line Tuesday at a shooting location here to protest the non-involvement of Canadian actors, directors and technicians in the production.

ACTRA president Jack Gray said that in order for the film to qualify under the provision of the capital cost allowance, the production must meet certain criteria — including earning profits for the investors and maintaining a maximum of six points through hiring Canadian professionals.

He said the company was unwilling or unable to sign the customary agreement or letter of adherence to ensure the involvement of ACTRA members.

Gray said although there are several Canadians involved, they are not there in a professional capacity. The American stars include Linda Manz and Raymond Burr.
